agenda: RCPC Town Hall Meeting

Thursday, January 20, 7:00 pm.
Rockridge Branch Library
5366 College Avenue at Manila,
Community Room (Upstairs)

The Future of Rockridge

How do you want to see Rockridge develop over the next 10 years? Please join us at the January 20 Town Hall Meeting to share your ideas about future development, as well as to weigh in on other important issues that affect our neighborhood, such as transportation, traffic, parking, crime, and parks and open space.

In 2004, RCPC responded to a number of proposed new developments in Rockridge, including two new restaurants along College Avenue and a retail complex on Claremont Avenue. In addition, RCPC is launching a planning process to explore development opportunities under the Rockridge BART station.

In late January, the RCPC board will hold its annual strategic planning retreat where we will be setting policy on how RCPC responds to development proposals and pursues development opportunities. In addition, we will determine our program priorities for 2005. These are important discussions, and we need to hear from you.

The January 20 Town Hall Meeting is an important opportunity for Rockridge residents to help set the direction for RCPC in the coming year. We need your input!

Oakland Schools Face Sweeping Changes, Closings in 2005

Closures, charters, New Small Autonomous Schools (NSAS) part of controversial solutions to OUSD ills

by Kerry Hamill, Member,
Oakland School Board

Sweeping changes are planned in the Oakland School District in response to the loss of 9,500 students in six years, chronic academic underachievement, and a mandate to re-make troubled schools contained in the federal "No Child Left Behind" act.

State-appointed school district administrator Dr. Randy Ward last week acted on two initiatives which will overhaul the current complement of 13 North Oakland schools. Ward will close Golden Gate Elementary School at 6200 Golden Gate Avenue and Washington Elementary School at 581 61st Street by the end of this school year. A New Small Autonomous (NSAS) Kindergarten-through-8th grade school (a district school — not a charter school) is currently being Chanting Q&A riffs like "What's disgusting? Union busting!" and waving picket signs at honking motorists, a group of about 60 Claremont workers paraded on the sidewalk outside the main entrance to the Claremont Hotel at noon on December 18 to protest stalled contract negotiations.

Infill and History at Temescal Place

Jeff Norman, Temescal artist, and Tom Dolan, Rockridge architect, enhance "green" condo development with historical tributes

by Claire Wahrhaftig-Isaacs

It's 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday, December 15, at Lanesplitters Pizza Parlor at 48th and Telegraph. A lively crowd is enjoying beverages and snacks. The group of developers, residents, lookers-on, friends and city officials moves as one across the street to the new 25-unit, completely occupied, six-story condo development named Temescal Place. At 4811 Telegraph, it's a handsome and simple building.

The buzz is about Temescal's becoming "the" place to be.

Councilwoman Jane Brunner is elated. Under quickly rigged bright lights on the sidewalk, she states, "We are going BACK to the way we were in the 1880s in Temescal." She adds that the new building is a good development for the neighborhood and for business and restaurants. Artist Jeff Norman, including the temporary historical plaques for Temescal Plaza's construction fence, the Temescal Post Office sculptural seated area, and the public art for Fire Station 8, has once again made a place come alive with history artistically presented. Yes, this is a great artist's community.

Norman met with Ron Kriss and Roy Alper, developers of the building, two years ago. At first they planned only an historical plaque acknowledging the site's Italian history. This grew to include a striking black-and-white photo of old-time Temescal's cable car, conductor and gripman. "Here, Over Time," is a series of 11 maps in the lobby that document the site in chronological order from 1776, revealing how the Bay Area and neighborhood have changed.

While this is a private development and no art was required, Kriss, a broker at Lawton Associates in Rockridge, and their facilitator, Patrick Zimski, were eager to honor the neighborhood. So was architect Thomas Dolan, also a Rockridge resident. Dolan, a great believer in urban infill, says, "Auto transit is a measure of dysfunction. One should be only 15 minutes away from work by some form of transit other than auto — public transit, bike, or foot — or the system is wrong." An advocate of Smart Growth and a proponent of "green architecture and urbanism," Dolan is proud that Temescal Place has the largest array of solar panels on any roof in Oakland. Because Oakland has designated Temescal a "growth and change" district, they are allowed a 20-foot height variance to achieve greater housing density. "Merchants feel density is their friend," he said. He noted that BART is only 10 minutes away in two directions. The building is "contextual," that is, it refers to details of nearby buildings, especially one at 42nd St., and thus reflects the neighborhood.

Rockridge might do well to note this trend in neighboring Temescal. While Rockridge has its restaurants and shops, one sees no effort here to adorn buildings with art or historical materials. Maybe it's worth considering. At any rate, the feeling is lively and getting much safer in this sister neighborhood, so close to Rockridge shopping. Do take a look.

Join DMV Neighbors in a Temescal Creek Cleanup

Saturday, January 15, 2005
9 a.m. to Noon

Please join the DMV Neighbors beside Temescal Creek for a volunteer creek cleanup. We will meet in the DMV parking lot at Claremont and Cavour at 9 a.m. Saturday, January 15. The DMV Neighbors Association will provide coffee and snacks.

Volunteers will weed, rake, sweep, prune, cut back the ivy and pick up debris. The City of Oakland Public Works Environmental Services Division will supply gloves, garbage bags, and tools (loppers, rakes, hoes, brooms, litter pickup sticks, etc.). If you have a favorite tool for these activities, please bring it with you. Be sure to label your tools. Wheelbarrows are especially useful. The creek bed may be wet, so boots are recommended.

Please join us. It always looks so much better after our morning of "yard" work.

Sponsored by the DMV Neighbors Association and the City of Oakland Environmental Services Division. For questions: Margaret, 655-1767.

Neighbors Speak Out About Pedophile Priests at St. Albert's

by Lydia Gans

The Rockridge neighborhood was in the news last month — and it wasn't very flattering. St. Albert's Priory — which many of us had once thought of as a peaceful, friendly neighbor — was recently revealed to be serving as a treatment center for priests accused of pedophilia. The resulting uproar — or was it just a tempest in a teapot? — inspired this Rockridge News reporter to contact some of the priory's neighbors for their reaction.

Details were aired in several newspaper articles and Channel 7 reports. Of the 21 men residing at the priory, seven are priests who have reportedly admitted to sexually abusing children. Apparently they were transferred there a couple of years ago under a cloak of secrecy. The flurry of media coverage and a flyer distributed by SNAP (Survivors Network for those Abused by Priests) has made most of the priory's neighbors aware of the scandal. Interestingly, residents expressed a wide range of opinions about St. Albert's priests.

People spoke quite freely, but only on the condition that their names not be printed, and they consistently expressed anger over the church's secrecy on the matter.

One person who has spoken vehemently and publicly is Annette Floysturp, the first to inform me of the situation. She is outraged that these priests are here and that their presence was not disclosed. "The order's primary focus has been to protect the privacy of these men; it has not been to protect this community against their predation," she said. "And that's not right. When you're an admitted pedophile and your order is paying major restitution to victims on your behalf, at that point I think you've lost some of your claim to privacy. It wouldn't be beside the point to post their pictures and their names on St. Albert's website."

A Harwood Avenue mother of three said she was shocked by the news but not worried about her children. "The bottom line for me is disclosure. We all have a right to know." Her husband agreed: "I don't feel our children are at risk."

Another woman said that her children have many friends in the neighborhood and "go in and out of people's houses," but she was not overly concerned. "If it's true they're in therapy and that it's been a long time since they offended and that they're doing the work that they need to do, I support that," she said.

A mother of grown children was ambivalent. "I don't think these people should be getting off at all... they have committed a crime and they should be subject to the laws of the state." But then she added, "They haven't bothered me; they haven't bothered the community; I guess I can say, what's the harm? If somebody does get harmed then should we say, I told you so?"

On Chabot Road, I met with a couple of parents who were unconcerned but suggested that this might be a good reminder of the importance of parents being aware of what their children are doing and who they are associating with.

Sparks Fly As Gulassa Sworn In to Peralta Position

by Claire Wahrhaftig-Isaacs

One might think of a swearing-in of a new public officer as a rather pleasant, cheery event. But before Cy Gulassa and his fellow new Peralta College Board trustees even took their oaths, a series of speakers utilized the open forum of the meeting of the outgoing board to berate a last-minute contract award.

Just before Thanksgiving, with little notice, the old Board granted an exclusive one-year contract to create a plan for developing the Laney College parking lot and adjoining lands. No faculty or staff, not even the president of Laney College, had received prior notice of the proposal, and the Board voted on the item even though it was labeled "discussion only". A parade of angry speakers, including faculty union president Michael Mills and Laney football coach Stan Peters, admonished the old board for conflicts of interest, violation of procedures, lack of vision and poor judgment. The Board sat with frozen faces while many in the audience of 200 or more cheered the critics.

Mills and Peters suggested that the board's decision violated the Brown Act, because it was not properly noticed to the public. They faulted the outgoing board for not educating the public about this proposed action and the fact that the resolution was passed without the public, faculty or students having information or input. They claimed the lands are needed for athletic activity and future growth. Such a huge building project would bring increased traffic, stymie any future college growth and turn Laney into an "urban jungle," they said.

But most of the audience was there to enjoy watching favored candidates take their formal oaths of office. After being sworn in by EBMUD Director Bill Patterson, Gulassa said that his decisive win was a mandate to bring new fiscal accountability and open decision making to the district. He plans to urge the new Board to revisit the Laney land decision in January. Dignitaries at the event included members of local school boards, BART, and Congresswoman Barbara Lee.

The other three Trustees, Marcie Hodge, Bill Withrow, and Nicky González Yuen, were then sworn in.

As the new nameplates were placed on the podium and the old removed, the new Trustees and three holdovers sat down to do the college's business. Soon Gulassa was taking notes, scanning papers and sipping water like a pro.

Help Improve Literacy: Become a Head-Start Storyreader

Want to pick up great story-reading skills and encourage a new generation of readers in Oakland? Volunteer storyreaders present weekly storytimes to preschoolers at one of Oakland's 20 Head Start centers, introducing children to the pleasure of stories and inspiring excitement about books and reading. In a comprehensive storytime class that begins Tuesday, January 18 at the Rockridge Branch Library, participants will learn the art of storytelling from Gay Ducey, whose storytelling talents have been featured on the Mister Rogers show.

New volunteers must complete a series of seven classes focusing on how to select and share wonderful books and present engaging storytimes for preschool children ages three to five. Training dates and locations are listed in the accompanying schedule; volunteers need to sign up in advance and attend every meeting to complete the course. Books for Wider Horizons, a program of the Oakland Public Library, facilitates both the training course and the volunteer program.

Instructor Gay Ducey is the Children's Librarian at the Rockridge Branch of the Oakland Public Library. Ms. Ducey serves as professor of storytelling for Dominican College, Santa Rosa College, UCB Extension and her alma mater, the University of California at Berkeley Library School. She is the former co-chair of the National Storytelling Association, and is co-founder/director of the Bay Area Storytelling Festival.

All training will be at the Rockridge Branch Library, 5366 College Avenue. Bilingual volunteers are especially needed.

For more information or to reserve a spot, call 238-7453.

Biker Cops? In Rockridge? Vrooom!

◀ Nestled side-by-side, 13 police motorcycles hug the curb next to the Claremont Diner, a clean, well lighted place.

▶ Sheriff's Department motorcycle training officer Rich Cademartori explains why all these cop motorcycles were cruising Rockridge recently.

PHOTOS: CY GULASSA

by Cy Gulassa

The sight of a baker's dozen of gleaming police bikes at parade-rest on Florio Street beside Rockridge's Claremont Diner on a recent December Saturday was enough to slow pedestrians and invite several dog walkers to gawk. One Rockridge resident, prudently restraining his terrier from making its mark on a motorcycle, wondered aloud, "Who's patrolling the highways if a whole brigade of cops is fueling up at the same time?"

Barely was that question posed when someone who looked like a sheriff out of central casting emerged from the diner, swinging wide the stainless steel door, a strapping six-footer with silver hair and moustache, a grandfatherly face and hands that could crush walnuts if the need should arise. A stream of cops followed him, like church letting out. They chatted, stretched, adjusted sunglasses and helmets and mounted their Kawasaki KZ 1000s, which brayed a thunderous chorus of vroooms.

"What's up?" I asked the captain.

"Motorcycle school," he said, zipping up his red jacket. "After this lunch break, all these rookies'll head for the hills, a little training on canyon and ridge roads, sharp turns, U-turns, figure-8s, formations, stuff like that."

It turns out that the "sheriff" is actually retired Oakland police officer Rich Cademartori, Temescal-born-and-raised, who is the official Lead Motorcycle Instructor for the regional training center of the Alameda County Sheriff's Office. Students come from all over the Bay Area, he said, including Napa and Santa Clara counties, for an intensive, two-week course in basics at the Dublin police training campus, which yearly graduates over a hundred trained motorcycle officers.

Why were they in Rockridge?

"Well, it was their first off-campus outing and they were training on upper Lawton Avenue on how to park a bike on a steep grade with rolled gutters," Cademartori said.

So what's so special about the Claremont Diner? There always seems to be lots of cops here.

"Simple. Great classic food, good service, a nice clean environment."

What do cops eat nowadays?

"Used to be hamburgers when I was a cop, but now some even go for tofu."

Cademartori saddled up and took the lead. One-by-one the rookies peeled off after him, roaring up Florio Street in thunderous single file. Bringing up the rear was instructor Tom Ryan astride a vintage Harley, a kind of caboose to the train of fresh cadets.

Peaberry's, Politics &amp; Tea

Earl Grey in the Ascendant

by John Gussman

"Thank God for tea! What would the world be without tea? How did it exist? I am glad I was not born before tea. I can drink any quantity when I have not tasted wine; otherwise I am haunted by blue-devils by day, and dragons by night."

— SYDNEY SMITH (1771-1845), EDITOR OF THE EDINBURGH REVIEW

Lynn Mallard, the proprietor of Peaberry's Coffee & Tea Company, began with a background in chemistry. She entered the artisan coffee and tea trade in the early 1980s, working for Peet's in Berkeley. Later, she decided to strike out on her own, and in 1989 opened a shop in Market Hall.

Seated in her Emeryville tasting room some months ago, Lynn discoursed on the subject of tea as she measured tea leaves onto a scale, preparing for a tasting session. She spoke about Earl Grey tea, and the vagaries of the leaves and the blends. Peaberry's introduced its own Earl Grey tea blend in 1997.

"Earl Grey," of course, refers to a tea which has been scented with bergamot. The bergamot (citrus bergamia) is a kind of small, inedible, pear-shaped orange, mostly grown in the Reggio di Calabria, a coastal region of southern Italy. Each winter bergamots are harvested and peeled, and the peels are cold-pressed to produce a greenish oil with a grapefruit- or lavender-like aroma.

Earl Grey tea is traditionally prepared by placing a quantity of tea leaves in a large blender or drum, squirting oil of bergamot into the drum, and rotating the drum so that the oil mixes with the leaves. The tea then sits for some days, while the oil settles in. Later, when the leaves are steeped, they produce an infusion with a smoky or citrus-y fragrance and a complex taste which many tea drinkers find delightful. Some tea sellers blend and scent the tea themselves, while others have this done by wholesalers, usually in Austria, Germany, or Britain.

Forty years ago, Earl Grey tea was less often seen than now. When one did come across it, it was always loose, and usually packed in a dusky yellow tin bearing the name of Twinings. Since then, however, Earl Grey tea has spread far and wide, even to small towns and truck stops.

With the spread has come diversification. Until lately, the typical Earl Grey, at least in the United States, was a conventional mixture of Chinese and Indian black teas, strong and robust, and easy to balance against a strong bergamot scent. But today there are Earl Grey blends of every type, using leaves from nearly every tea-growing region in almost every imaginable combination. Green teas are seen in Earl Grey blends very often, and even (rarely) white teas.

The blends are now often accented with lavender or other petals — a French innovation — or with leaves or blossoms from the bergamot tree itself. Peaberry's Earl Grey, for instance, owes its uniqueness partly to the blending and balancing of Indian tea leaves and bergamot, but partly to wild blue mallow blossoms.

Who Was Earl Grey?

Strange to say, this scented tea which has proven so versatile was named for one of the most inflexible — though one of the most progressive — British politicians of the nineteenth century. Charles Grey (1764-1845) was the son of General Sir Charles Grey, a British commander who led the advance on Philadelphia in 1777, and who was later raised to the peerage. During the 1780s, the younger Grey, spurning the family's Tory traditions, entered the House of Commons as a Whig, at a time when the Whigs (forerunners of the Liberal party) were in decline. In Parliament, Grey was a firebrand, agitating for reform of the electoral system and against the abolition of home rule in Ireland.

During 1806-7, the Whigs gained control of the government, and Grey became Foreign Minister, winning passage of legislation to ban the slave trade throughout the British Empire. Fresh from this triumph, and now acting as Whig leader in the House of Commons, he called for abolition of the religious tests which prevented Catholics from being commissioned as officers in the Army and Navy. This so outraged King George III that he dismissed the Whig ministry.

The historian Lord David Cecil describes Grey as "a shy, reserved, grand seigneur of unbending principles and distinguished manners." H.W.C. Davis states that he "loved to sally forth... to deliver a rousing speech... [defending] the liberties of British subjects, or the rights of oppressed peoples.... On such a subject he was graceful, incisive, even eloquent; his gestures and his delivery were consummate."

Grey soon succeeded to the top party leadership, as well as to his father's earldom, and entered the House of Lords. For the next 23 years, however, since Grey refused to join any coalition in which his party was not dominant, the Whigs had little influence on affairs of state.

All this changed in 1830, when an ultra-conservative Tory government collapsed

amidst outbreaks of mob violence in the rural counties and widespread discontent among many branches of society. At the request of the new king, William IV, Earl Grey agreed to become Prime Minister at the head of a liberal coalition.

The Grey ministry pushed hard for a Reform Bill which would extend the electoral franchise to the middle class and abolish the "rotten boroughs" (obsolete electoral districts). The House of Commons, in a state of fright, quickly passed the Reform Bill, and it went to the House of Lords. There, Grey himself led the debate, reviving (says Lord Cecil) "for the wonder and delight of a new generation, the stately splendors of eighteenth-century oratory."

After the debate, the Rev. Sydney Smith, a celebrated literary reviewer, tea aficionado and close friend of the Prime Minister, wrote to Lady Grey: "Lord Grey should stand further from the Bench and more in the body of the house, should stand more upright, and raise his arm — (which no Englishman does, and all foreigners do) from the Shoulder, and not from the Elbow. But he speaks beautifully, and is a torch among tapers." (Letter of Dec. 6, 1831.)

Unfortunately, the Lords refused to pass the Reform Bill without mutilating it. Grey and his cabinet then resigned. With civil unrest spreading through the country, and the Tories unable to form a government, the King had to consent to create enough new liberal peers (lords) to ensure passage of the original Bill. On the next reading of the Bill, rather than see their numbers diluted, enough Tory peers abstained to allow the Reform Bill to pass.

Grey's ministry, which lasted only four years, also got Parliament to abolish slavery within the Empire and to make it unlawful for children younger than 12 to work in factories for more than 9 hours a day.

And the tea connection? As the story goes, while Grey was Prime Minister, a British diplomat in China was responsible for saving the life of a mandarin. The grateful mandarin sent Earl Grey a quantity of scented tea, along with the recipe. Grey later asked Twinings, the London tea firm, to replenish his supply, and the tea was often served in his household.

While Earl Grey held sway in Westminster, the tea that now bears his name was, simply, black tea from China, scented with citrus oil (whether from bergamot, or from the oriental bitter orange, we cannot be sure). China had a monopoly on the tea export trade to Europe; the first chests of Indian tea did not reach London until 1839.

The whole matter is more complicated today. It is no longer just a question of sending word to Twinings: now there are hundreds of Earl Grey blends, with new ones appearing all the time. How is one to choose?

St. Albert's Priests

A neighbor remarked that the men living at Siena House on Presley Way, which is affiliated with St. Albert's, have been great neighbors. When they walk by, "they're cordial, say hello, and are not overly friendly," she said. Although she has small children, she said, "We don't feel threatened. Apparently it was all in the past and there are different takes on whether they can be rehabilitated. You have to let people get on with their lives."

Other residents on Presley Street voiced their anger about the secrecy.

"It probably would have been fine if they had said something ahead of time. But if you didn't tell us, it sort of (implies) that you were hiding something," one person said.

Another Presley Street resident expressed stronger feelings. "It's just another example of the Catholic Church's attitude of hiding things, covering them up, being secretive and in denial... and the whole foolishness of celibacy."

Several people questioned the wisdom of having so many pedophiles in one setting. One suggested that having as many as 7 out of 21 priests with the same problem might cause them "to think they're normal."

The issue that seemed to rile most neighbors was the Church's silence. As the SNAP flyer declared: "Parents and neighbors need honest answers. Enough secrecy!" As I write this, several meetings are planned. And I have to end with an all too familiar statement: I called St. Albert's to get their input but they did not return my call.

Crime Reports in Rockridge

by Susan Montauk, NCPC Vice Chair

Rockridge residents were victims of a variety of crimes and scares during the month of December and they reported them to the Rockridge Neighborhood Watch Network, an on-line Yahoo! group. Here's a sample:

- a mountain lion sighting in upper Rockridge;
- a theft of bicycles from Elizabeth House by a group of male teens;
- a tree-pruning scam by a well-spoken man who goes by the name of John (see Letters to Editor, page 10);
- attempted mail theft (call the Postal Service at 415/778-5911 to report mail box tampering);
- home burglaries on Ayala, Harwood, Bryant and Lawton.

The Oakland hills cat-burglar has apparently been caught. Beginning in July, this daring criminal engaged in a months-long spree of about 60 home burglaries in that neighborhood. Orinda police apprehended a suspect on October 28 after a three-hour chase and they believe the man they took into custody, 45 year-old Derric Lewis, is the Oakland Hills cat burglar.

During the burglary crisis, hills resident Steven Fox helped establish a block-by-block e-mail/phone network to disseminate reports about the burglar's activities in his neighborhood. These new lines of communication have galvanized many citizens to lobby for better police protection. In November and December, Mayor Brown held a series of open forums for citizens to air their concerns about crime. Hills residents and others throughout Oakland spoke to the need for more police resources to devote to burglary investigation (there is only one OPD staffmember to follow all leads on burglaries in Oakland).

CRIME WATCH: A possible pattern of robberies developed in mid-December and involved victims walking to and from Rockridge BART. One male and one female, armed with a silver gun, told the victims to "Give me that" before they took their purses. The male was described as black, 25 years old, 5'11" and 160 pounds. The female was described as black, 30s, 5'7" and 170 pounds.

NEIGHBORHOOD WATCH: With OPD resources at a minimum, citizens can help protect themselves by keeping in touch about crime and suspicious behavior in their neighborhoods. Rockridge residents can join the Rockridge Network Yahoo! group by logging on to www.yahoo.com and searching for Rockridge Neighborhood Watch Network.

Rockridge residents are also invited to attend the monthly Neighborhood Crime Prevention Council meetings to report specific concerns and ask questions of community-policing officers. The greater Rockridge NCPC meets the third Tuesday of each month (next meeting January 18) at the Temescal Library, 5205 Telegraph Avenue, at 7 pm. More information about the NCPC can be found on www.rockridgencpc.com.

Nomad Café Owner: "Community Hero"

by Cy Gulassa

In mythology, those who rise above self-interest to face great odds for the benefit of the community are commonly anointed heroes. In that spirit, Christopher Waters, owner of Nomad Café at 6500 Shattuck was dubbed "Community Hero" by Councilmember Jane Brunner at her December Community Advisory meeting celebrating sustainable businesses.

No, Waters does not rescue damsels lashed to train tracks or deflect incoming meteors. He does something far more heroic. Risking apostasy, he joins those who believe that business should have two bottom lines, one for taking something out of the community (profit), and one for giving something back (sustaining it) by, among other things, protecting the environment, giving good service, being involved in the community, and respecting workers—even if it shrinks the first bottom line. In short, when it comes to business philosophy, he holds that if businesses nurture rather than exploit the community, residents will willingly support them even if prices may be slightly higher.

The Brunner proclamation honors Waters for being a community leader, creator of a "thriving small business and a friendly crossroads for the neighborhood," and for designing the café's "proactive recycling and composting programs [that] divert 12 tons of waste per year from local landfills." These business practices earned him the State Waste Reduction Program (WRAP) of the Year award, and certification as a Green Business by the Alameda County Department of Environmental Health.

The café serves organic vegetables and only Fair Trade organic coffee and organic tea, and is famous for its sandwiches, smoothies and desserts. With free wi-fi access, a place to park toddlers, outdoor tables, hip staff and a sleek, glassy design, Nomad is a great place to read, type that term paper or just hang out.

TREE TRIM/YARD WORK SCAM ARTIST IN ROCKRIDGE Editor:

Okay, he comes to the door, tells you that he is working down the street, is almost done and wants to know if you would like to have your trees trimmed. He is probably in his late 30s, early 40s, has light skin and eyes and a close-shaven head, good build. He says his name is John Niu, that he is Tongan. He is well spoken, seems like a good guy, even tells you that he is a good man. He has no business card with him but he gives you his telephone number, has tools and talks knowledgeably about the trees. He quotes a price and asks you to pay him in cash. You hire him and he starts to trim the trees. The first tree looked pretty good, I thought.

He worked for me one afternoon, then showed up on time the next morning. He then worked until noon, at which time he said he needed to be paid so that his brother could get the car out of the shop and come to pick up the branches. I paid him the amount we had agreed upon. We had also begun to talk about working on my fence. He started to take the fence apart, said he had the wood and I should advance him some of the money for that job so that he and his brother could get started on it this afternoon. I paid him a portion of the agreed upon sum for that job and he left to get his car, or so I thought. Thing is, he never came back.

I called the two numbers he had given me and they are bogus. I called a neighbor for whom he said he had worked, and she knew immediately who he was, and that he had done the same thing to her as well as another neighbor across the street. He works until he has your confidence, gets whatever cash he can in advance and then leaves the leaves and disappears.

People need to be warned or they are going to be out of some serious cash. At least five or six people here know what he looks like and how he operates.

has several objectives—to get management back to the table to negotiate health benefits and back pay for the three-and-a-half years members have gone without a contract. The protesters also want Spa employees to be able to unionize. “Today’s picketing is to remind the old management and the new one coming in that we will never stop boycotting until we get a just settlement,” Darby said.

Many businesses have supported the boycott, including Kaiser Permanente and the Port of Oakland, causing a major loss of income that forced KSL, the owner of the Claremont, to sell its holdings last February to CNL Hospitality. KSL, however, will continue to serve as the interim manager.

Meanwhile, the pickets marched on, some still wearing their waiter uniforms, chanting in Spanish, “¡Escucha! ¡Escucha! ¡Estamos en la lucha!” (“Listen, Listen! We are in a struggle!”). They rattled wooden clackers and beat their picket signs with sticks. A few Oakland police officers stood near their vehicles, squinting into the bright winter sun.

Living your Dance, Dancing your Life

When Ortun Neisar, who writes this column, asked me to fill in during her unusually busy holiday season, I wondered how I could best serve our Rockridge News readership. So I was thrilled to learn from Harwood resident Yoshiko Kukado that Joanna Gewertz Harris is teaching dance for older adults at the Shawl-Anderson Dance Center, on Alcatraz just east of College. Shawl-Anderson, you may know, is a first-rate serious dance studio. Many greats of the dance world, such as Charles Weidman, May O'Donnell and Margy Jenkins, have taught master classes there, and currently Reginald Savage uses it as a home base.

Joanna starts each class with a simple body warm up. Then after stretches, we work out a dance pattern and practice it. We do both barre and floor work, using all parts of our bodies gently but firmly. Finally, we develop and expand the dance patterns while encouraging personal creativity. We also work in pairs, lines, and circles, and finish with a simple cool down followed by meditation.

What is unique about this class is its cooperative and creative atmosphere. We support one another, encouraging, not challenging or competing, not showing off our figures, our strength or agility. This is a class for people mostly between 50 and 80. (The 80-year-old is Judy Job, a renowned local dance teacher herself who runs the decades-old legendary Peters-Wright Studio in San Francisco in the Haight, and loves to work out with Joanna.) The purpose is to have fun while experiencing well-designed exercise. There is no pressure to jump or run or do anything that could damage joints, muscles, or bones. It is safe for seniors and others who have not been exercising recently. For this full-figured writer with her hip replacement, injured knee and old back problem, this class is a miracle of fun and gradually improving agility.

Best of all is our teacher. I first met Joanna in the 1960s, when I worked at what is now Cal Performances and she taught Dance in the P.E. Department. She invited me to her class at Live Oak Park. I was much younger then, and very self-conscious about my body.

She taught me that the figure is less important than the attitude. She herself had the wrong shape for ballet, so she switched to modern dance. She studied with such legends as Martha Graham, Duncan Dance, Jose Limon, Hanya Holm, Anna Halprin, and Merce Cunningham in New York City, where she grew up in the Bronx. It's not surprising that she just returned from the Big Apple, where she gave a lecture on Jewish modern dance history; she's part of it.

Joanna has taught dance, dance history, and dance therapy at such places as Mills, Lone Mountain College, and Carnegie Institute of Technology. She's an accomplished arts administrator with experience at the New Pickle Family Circus, Dance through Time, Stagebridge, Aurora Theater, and the Oakland East Bay Symphony. She's worked as an artist-in-residence here and abroad and has written critical reviews. Presently she is Project Director of Bay Area Dancing, 1915-67: Beyond Isadora?

This dynamic woman could inspire a snail to dance. She makes it natural and clear.

We are fortunate to have such a vivid and accomplished individual right around the corner. Do join us. Joanna's class is held each Tuesday morning from 9:30 to 11 a.m. Park early. Cost is $10 per session. Give it a try. These days I'm dancing with delight. You can, too!

For information, phone/FAX Joanna at 653-8111 or e-mail joannagharris@comcast.net.

Singing Your Song

A public announcement

SACRED & PROFANE, a chamber chorus based in Rockridge, is looking for voices in all sections for its 2004-05 concert season.

In February, our winter concert will celebrate the Songs of Solomon throughout history and in spring our May concert will be All Swedish, all a cappella. Our concerts will take place in Berkeley, Walnut Creek and San Francisco.

If you are an experienced singer with a healthy voice and a great attitude, please join us for this extraordinary concert season. Rehearsals are Monday evening in the Oakland/Rockridge area. S & P is a small, fine-tuned chamber choir that enjoys singing high quality repertoire in a supportive, fun, and challenging rehearsal environment.

Auditions will be held in January. To schedule an audition, please contact Sacred & Profane at 415/602-2492, or e-mail the director at seeman@usfca.edu. For more information, please visit our Web page at <http://www.sacredprofane.org>.

Schools Changes

“incubated” and will open at the Washington Elementary School campus next fall. Danielle Neves, a Westlake Middle School assistant principal, has been named as the school’s new principal. All six North Oakland preschool and after-school programs currently housed in flatland elementary schools will remain open next year.

Ward also announced that he will close the 6th grade at Verdesse Carter Middle School at 4521 Webster Street next year, allow the current 7th graders to graduate as planned in 2006, and eventually close the school over time. Students who normally feed into Carter would instead be directed to the new middle school at Washington.

Aspire Public Schools, a charter school consortium with 11 schools statewide and three in Oakland, will open a new elementary school on the Golden Gate Elementary School site in September, 2005. The new charter will lease space from the district, and is required to accept any current Golden Gate Elementary School families interested in attending. Kristyn Klei, a former East Palo Alto charter school principal with a track record of boosting achievement among very low-income students, has been named the school’s principal.

Carter, Washington and Golden Gate schools have all dramatically lost enrollments since 1999. Washington is down from 331 students in 1999 to 153 students this year – the school is less than 50% occupied. More than 100 families who live in the attendance area transferred to another school in the Oakland Unified School system. Academic achievement declined significantly at Washington and Golden Gate (GG) last year, with GG losing 79 points from its Academic Performance Index, the highest drop in the district. At Golden Gate, only 10% of the students are proficient in reading, and 8% in math. Washington shows 23% proficiency in reading and 17% in math, and Carter shows 12% in reading and 5% in math. Nearly 200 families from the Carter attendance area transferred to other OUSD middle schools.

Drop in Enrollment

Across the district, students are learning better. More than double the number of students are scoring at basic, proficient or advanced in language arts today than in 1999 (58% in 2004 versus 28% in 1999). However, according to district data, our enrollment has been on a consistent trajectory downward since 1999, and the enrollment loss has occurred primarily within the African-American community. While most private schools and districts across the state record fewer students, no losses compare in scale to Oakland’s. Undeniably, the city’s skyrocketing housing prices are driving out many poor families, and charter schools now educate more than 4,000 families.

Across the rest of the district, Ward closed five additional schools. In East and Central Oakland, King Estates Middle School will close, and a NSAS school will open at the site next year. Fremont High School in 2000 was one of the most overcrowded secondary schools in the state. Former School District Administrator Dennis Chaconas (and the School Board) broke the school into NSAS schools. Ward will technically close the original school, now that all new families have been placed in one of the NSAS “theme” schools on the site. No family will be displaced in this closure.

Ward also closed the School of Social Justice, an NSAS school created by Chaconas (and the School Board), which failed to attract any students this school year and has been empty. Rudsdale Academy and West Oakland’s Village Academy are 8th grade programs created as temporary intervention schools in 2002 to serve 8th graders not yet ready for a comprehensive high school. Next year, struggling 8th graders will be directed into special programs created within our existing comprehensive high schools. Again, no families will be displaced from these closures.

New Small Autonomous Schools

These and other proposed changes raise a host of tough labor and community issues. New schools proposed by Ward’s staff are using the New Small Autonomous School (NSAS) District policy adopted by Chaconas and the School Board in 2000. The policy calls for the creation of new, small, redesigned schools for Oakland’s most underserved students. It limits the size of the schools and outlines criteria for admitting students, hiring staff, redesigning curriculum and encouraging teacher collaboration. Most NSAS schools have demonstrated improved students performance, innovations in the teaching and learning process and far greater participation among parents. Teachers must reapply for jobs at a newly created school, instead of the district’s seniority system dictating placement.

Ibelieve it is essential to gather a team of employees that shares a vision if we want “new schools” to succeed. The policy does not take a job away from any teacher. A teacher not accepted at a new school is guaranteed a job at another school. I have advocated vigorously for the creation of the new school at Washington, and will continue to advocate that no family in the North Oakland area targeted for changes be denied a public school close to home.

FROGPark Set for Public Art Funding

Rockridge's FROGPark, located near the intersection of Claremont Avenue and Cavour Street — site of the Department of Motor Vehicles building — is scheduled to receive generous funding for a public art component, according to sources at City Hall and FROG board members.

At a meeting of the Public Art Advisory Committee (PAAC) of the Oakland Cultural Arts Commission on December 6, FROG Board member Jennifer Cooper presented plans for FROGPark. She explained that FROG is receiving $125,000 for creek-related projects from Measure DD, and is setting aside $40,000 of that for an art component. Previously, FROG had set aside $10,000 from funds raised from other sources for the development of an artist-designed master plan.

In addition, there is $6,750 left over from Phase I of the park development. In 2003 this fund was to be spent to restore the mural "Oceanus," located on the west side of Claremont between Clifton and Hudson under the Highway 24 crossover, which had been vandalized over the years. However, Roberta Babcock, Assistant Director of Public Art, arranged funds from other sources for this restoration, saving the public art funds for a project within the park itself.

Jennifer explained that ideas being considered tend towards nature themes which would educate the public about the creek and its natural history. An artist could present these in an attractive and creative graphic form.

At the meeting, Director of Public Art Steve Huss went over the role and procedures of PAAC, which include developing a selection panel of artists as well as sending out a Request for Proposal to the art community.

Liaison from PAAC to the FROG Board is PAAC member Claire Wahrhaftig-Isaacs, of Roble Road. She has considerable experience in public art, having worked before retirement as Director of the San Francisco Arts Commission, where she administered its public art program.
