Bambino Thrift Shop volunteers (left to right) Dee McDonough, Lou Gates, and Carol Maes are making big plans for the store's anniversary later this month.

Bambino Thrift Shop: A Beacon of Support For Thirty Years

by Anna L. Marks

Alameda County public health nurse, activist, and feminist, Bertha Wright (1876-1971) believed health care services should be available to all income groups, especially for infants and young children, regardless of their ability to pay. This dream became a reality in 1914 when Wright founded Baby Hospital (now called UCSF Benioff Children's Hospital Oakland) with social worker Mabel Weed, her lifelong companion, and a group of local women.

When the all-male Board of Directors took control of the hospital in the late 1920s, the women formed Got Kitchen? Got Time? Join the Tour!

by Star Lightner

Hello Rockridge, it's time for another Rockridge Kitchen Tour and we are gearing up in two ways.

First, we're looking for kitchens to be on the tour. This year we are very interested in a diversity of kitchens in terms of style, cost, and function. Your kitchen may be Craftsman, mid-century modern, Victorian, eclectic, or another style. In terms of cost, many kitchens are very expensive to remodel, but maybe you did it on a shoestring. There can even be diversity of function. Maybe your kitchen is particularly small or you have decided to focus on energy efficiency. Moreover, it doesn't have to be all about the fixtures; it can also be about structure. Have you moved walls, repurposed spaces, or changed the flow?

auxiliary groups known as “The Branches” to continue raising money for the hospital. With the support of The Branches, the Bambino Thrift Shop opened in 1928. They moved to 5290 College Avenue in 1994.

Carol Maes has been working in the shop since 1998, first as Manager, then as Volunteer Manager. She now serves as Raffle Coordinator for their big anniversary celebration. Maes loves working in the neighborhood, only a half mile from her home where she’s lived for 50 years. Dee McDonough, the store’s 30th Anniversary Chair, is also a local resident and has lived in Upper Rockridge for the past 40 years. The two met decades ago when both their children went to school at St. Theresa’s.

The store will be holding a raffle on Saturday, May 18, and hopes neighbors come by in support. “It’s a little difficult to get people to come up to the Broadway end of College Avenue, so we are going to put out balloons and advertise a lot that we’re open — we will be serving tea and cookies, and holding our raffle drawing that same day,” says McDonough.

This year, they will be raffling off more than $4,000 worth of items and gift certificates that have been donated from businesses in Oakland, Berkeley, and beyond. “Traditionally over the years, The Branches as a whole have donated close to a million dollars from different functions... from Bingo to the Debutante Ball,” notes McDonough.

Raffle tickets will be available for sale May 7–18, and cost $5 for one, $10 for 3, $20 for seven; and $50 for 20. Grand prize is a special shopping experience: Bambino will pick one raffle winner who will be entitled to a 30 percent discount on purchases made through May 30, 2025. The discount will be applied to a maximum of one item per month for any full-priced item not already on sale or discounted (non-transferable, limited to personal use by winner only. Winner need not be present to win, but must present identification and the winner’s certificate at time of purchase).

It takes a lot of love and attention to keep the store stocked and appealing, and Shop Manager Lou Gates combines that with her background in information science to find efficient ways to sell things in the store. She inspects the influx of donations and posts photos to Social Media. “We’re constantly trying to make the store fresh and popular with the kids in the neighborhood.”

Gates also assists with donations, which are accepted on Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays from 11am to 1pm. She says typical donations include clothing, housewares, jewelry, books, and a some small furniture (due to limited display space). Some items are not accepted, like ripped or torn items, or those that pose a possible insurance risk, like exercise equipment, baby cribs, and baby car seats.

Please note that there’s a five-bag maximum for each donation. For larger furniture donations, it’s best to call the shop in advance at 510-658-7473 to ensure available space.

In short, there is no template and no specific type of kitchen we are looking for. Just as Rockridge is not a static and unchanging place, neither is the Rockridge Kitchen Tour. You may have noticed that there were three ADUs in the past two Kitchen Tours, and the RCPC board is enthusiastic about continuing to highlight them. Thus, if you have a new ADU that you would like to have on the tour, please let us know.

Kitchen Design Concepts

ADU Kitchens: How did you maximize a smaller space?

Budget Kitchens: Where did you find your materials? Did you DIY?

Traditional Kitchens: How have you preserved the original details of your kitchen?

Mid-Century Modern Kitchens: Where did you source the materials? Where did you draw inspiration?

Post-Modern Kitchens: What design features did you choose and why?

Smart Kitchens: What technological features enhance your life?

Green and Sustainable Kitchens: Have a fully electric kitchen to showcase?

We are also interested in your feedback: What are some things you would like to see (or not see) on the Kitchen Tour? While the Kitchen Tour is RCPC's only fundraiser and its main source of funding, we are interested in hearing how to make it better, whatever that means to you.

Second, we need VOLUNTEERS! The Kitchen Tour has a lot of moving parts and we need volunteers to handle advertising, sponsorships, and to create the tour brochure. We also need writers to create descriptions of the kitchens/ADUs; a photographer to photograph them; and a volunteer coordinator to recruit and train tour docents. We have a small but mighty team in the works so far, but we need more great folks to put it together.

Please email kitchentour@rockridge.org with kitchen or ADU candidates, feedback on the Kitchen Tour, or to volunteer. Thank you. ■

Neighbors Pitch in for Earth Day at Frog Park

by Will Sheldon

The annual Earth Day Frog Park and the Temescal Greenbelt clean-up was a great success. The big structure was cleaned; the fiber wood chips were turned over; sand that had infiltrated the wood chips was removed; trees, bushes, and ivy were trimmed; loose debris was removed; large amounts of trash were collected; graffiti was painted over; the bathroom was cleaned... and the park looks fabulous.

Friends of Frog Park thank all the volunteers who showed up to spread the love and get their hands dirty. Their next clean-up event will take place sometime in September for Creek to Bay Day.

Thank you to Ain't Normal Café for donating coffee, Bakesale Betty's for donating cinnamon rolls, and Boichik Bagels for donating bagels and schmears. And lastly, we thank the City of Oakland for supplying tools and a green waste dumpster. ■

Behind the Scenes With the Good People of Colby St.

by Skip Fogarty

Considering the types of small businesses typically profiled here in the Rockridge News, you probably wouldn't think about a bustling video production agency as one of our neighbors. But right there on Colby, in a former storefront turned yoga studio, is a company called MVP, formerly known as Maximize Video Productions.

Run by founder Max Fancher, MVP is a full-service creative agency with expertise in the whole scope of commercial production and film making — from storytelling to location scouting to casting to pre- and post-production editing, and everything in between.

“We take pride in our client list,” Fancher says. “As our business grew, we became able to take on bigger projects for clients like Apple, Genentech and Covered California. In turn, those larger accounts allow us to also serve cause-related companies and nonprofits with smaller budgets.” Examples include Silicon Valley Community Foundation, Hope Services, and Goodwill. “We look for opportunities to partner with clients who are eager to push the envelope creatively while also doing good in the world.”

In business for 17 years now, Fancher says, “we rebranded ourselves a few years ago. With a lot of thought and input, we settled on the notion of MVP being all about good people. That means we try to attract good people to work here. Then we align with good clients. That leads to our best possible work and I think it distinguishes us in the industry.”

The Santa Cruz native studied sociology at UC Berkeley and played football as a running back for the Bears. After Cal, he operated a sailing school and charter business in the Berkeley Marina. He also led sailing excursions in exotic locales like Tonga, Tahiti, Greece and Turkey.

Around the time his first daughter was born, Fancher was looking for a change of career direction. Always interested in film and photography, he said he really caught the bug for making videos on his sailing trips. He produced video “scrapbooks” for clients to remember and share their adventures. He enjoyed the work and discovered that people would actually pay for it. So, he set a new course, at first working from a bedroom at home. “We have a picture of our baby in a sling on my chest while I’m pounding away at the keyboard.”

Then, one day on his neighborhood jog, he spotted a “For Rent” sign. The corner building had caught his eye before as he was looking for more space to grow his business. When he inquired and toured the space, he knew the former neighborhood grocery was the perfect spot for MVP. Now, the 1,000-square-foot boutique studio space includes edit bays for post-production, conference space for meetings, and enough room to shoot the occasional interview or product shot.

Snug in a residential neighborhood, the company aims to be a good neighbor in many ways. They held an open house when they first moved in, offer fresh water to passerby dogs, and recently organized an art show in Colby Park. With creative flair, they frequently re-purpose the props from client shoots into fun window displays describing their projects.

Beyond Rockridge, the company really walks the walk of being good people. The first Saturday each month, they rally employees and volunteers to feed hundreds of unhoused folks in San Francisco’s Tenderloin and in West Oakland. “We work with City Eats to deliver hot meals which are much better than a cold sandwich handout,” Fancher says. “These days, there’s plenty of negativity about our downtown areas, but we find that giving something back shifts people’s attitudes from helplessness to empathy.”

MVP currently employs about 20 folks. Several are full-time employees and, as is typical in the production industry, most MVP associates work on a per-project basis.

Eric Wahlstrom is the lead editor on MVP’s various projects. With the company for over four years, he says “working at MVP is different than the large companies I used to work for because I’m given a lot of creative autonomy, and my ideas go further here. Max embodies our good people ethos in how he supports and values me as an employee.”

Producer Danielle Cheifetz echoes those ideas. “Over the years, I’ve cultivated a network of professionals with positive attitudes and reliability, and getting the opportunity to meet and work with other good people only helps everyone grow.”

Dogs and Cats of Rockridge

Her name, Machka, is slang for “female cat” in central Europe, and she stands in solidarity with all displaced cats during wartime. The Maine Coon cat loves Costco Paté and prefers to take a nap when “people food” is being served. Machka has an uncanny ability to get into in any new box in under five seconds and will chase any drinking straw to add to her growing collection. She loves to play with her sister feline, Kitska. They both trained easily and have learned to come on command and give fist bumps.

The Lioness of Lawton

This is Germ, a four-year-old Bernedoodle. He was adopted from Michigan right before the pandemic when he was only eight weeks old. After long hikes, he loves to be rewarded with peanut butter, cheese, and Polka dog treats. He has a lot of empathy and always knows when you need extra cuddles. When he is not walking with his guardians to Trader Joe’s or Bakesale Betty, you will find him sitting or lying down on the porch steps watching the world go by.

Max and his wife Maggie, who serves as MVP's CFO, have two daughters, Ella, 16, and Tessa, 8, and they live on Boyd Avenue. "One thing that's great about Rockridge is the wonderful public schools," Fancher says. Ella attended Chabot Elementary, Claremont Middle, and is now at Oakland Tech. Tessa is on the same course.

"When you find alignment with your co-workers, your clients, and your community, it's just the best feeling," Fancher concludes. Characteristically, he gathers the team before every client shoot in a football-style huddle to share a bonding chant: "On three... one, two, three — good people!"

Know Justice, Know Peace

by Carol Kasparek

“We need to do something,” said engineer, artist, and Rockridge resident Mauricio Bustos in reaction to the tide of national events surrounding the death of George Floyd in the summer of 2020. He realized then that he had to “channel his anger at what was happening in the world,” and was convinced that he needed to use his talents to “get people to think that we are all in this together.”

One of his mentors would always ask, “Are you connected to power and to the ground?” Bustos would remind himself of this as he embarked on an artistic endeavor to tie it all together. He decided to use light, as in neon and LED, to convey his message as he brought a luminous Black Lives Matter sign to life. He and his crew fashioned the BLM piece in a shared warehouse in Emeryville where Burner fire-breathing vehicles take shape. He did not expect that the execution of the sculpture would turn out to be only one of his challenges.

When he looked for a location to mount the piece, he discovered that people did not want to get involved. Fortunately, Emeryville’s mayor at the time connected him with the owners of Rising Sun whose building overlooks Highway 24. Bustos and his son were soon up on the roof meticulously positioning the piece, reassuring vigilant police officers they were safe — and on July 25, 2020, the Black Lives Matter message blazed into being. “So beautiful, so clean, so much work,” Bustos remarked on the result.

Bustos has always found interesting things to do. For 15 years, he has been part of Core Crew creating fantastical and functional contraptions for Burning Man. With a graduate degree in Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering, he has constructed massive outdoor sculptures throughout the East Bay. On a weekend in 2018, he filled the empty lot at the corner of Claremont and College with fiberglass wands that bent and twisted in the wind. Later, he created a sea of steel seagrass at the Richmond Ferry Terminal.

The next large-scale social justice project for Bustos is already in process — a huge, animated neon work “Know Justice, Know Peace,” is currently taking shape. Bustos has open-sourced the technology he developed to control the displays, but money will ultimately determine the speed of progress. A crowdfunding site is funneling money for materials. They are hosting volunteer events where everyone will be acknowledged for their contributions. “A kid can say, ‘I sanded that letter,’” explained Bustos. The Crew (which also includes attorneys, doctors, and nonprofit organization leaders) will continue to devote themselves to bringing the sculpture into being.

“Know Justice, Know Peace will be a powerful gift to the community”, asserts Bustos, and the Oakland City Council agrees. They chose the piece to be part of the Festival of Lights, and will be mounted within the month across from the offices of the Mayor and Chamber of Commerce. With that unveiling, Bustos will have achieved his goal of bringing the joy of social justice to a larger audience — let there be light. ■

JUST LISTED

Park Day Co-Founder Inspires, Learns from Students

by Judith Doner Berne

“Those were the days when anything was possible.” Longtime Rockridge resident Susan Erb was referring to the '70s, when she, then a fledgling teacher, and five sets of parents left Twin Pines Day School — an independent progressive day school in the Temescal neighborhood — to found Park Day School.

Erb had knocked on the door of Twin Pines with degrees in art and psychology from Earlham College, a Quaker school in her native Ohio, but no teaching certificate. She was hired at $500 a month to teach kindergarten although, “I hardly knew how to teach.”

But growing dissatisfaction with what she described as a “chaotic” teaching and learning environment, drove the group to come up with an alternative. “We don’t like what is going on here” — exemplified by walls filled with psychedelic posters. “So, what would we like? It was somewhat of a conspiracy. We would meet after school out on the playground in secret.”

Come summer, the meetings shifted to her kitchen. “We didn’t have a lot of resources, but we did have a lot of imagination and desire,” she said. They opened the K-3 Park Day School that fall, renting space from Beth Jacob, the Orthodox Jewish Synagogue on Park Boulevard. “We mopped bathrooms and painted walls,” and with no money for furnishings, “We started digging in dumpsters in the Oakland Hills, the Oakland flats, and at Safeway.”

“We took every student we could get,” Erb said, with a September 1976 enrollment of 22. By October, that had grown to 28. Their calendar conflicted with the synagogue’s calendar, so on pre-Sabbath afternoons they held classes in a street parklet, “which no way was a park.” Three years later, with a growing student body, they moved to Montclair Presbyterian Church and added grades 4-6.

In a full-circle scenario, Twin Pines closed in 1982. Erb and her cohorts, with an enrollment that had grown to nearly 300 students, purchased the property. In 2006, the school “adopted” the East Bay Community School and expanded to K-8. “This was total investment,” she said. “There was no hierarchy. All decisions were made together by the staff and board.”

Erb was the reason the late Tom Little, self-described as a 22-year-old graduate student who sports a large red Afro, bushy mustache, and braces, left San Francisco State to become an unpaid intern at the new school.

“Tall and willowy, Susan conveys a serene confidence with adults that quickly morphs into gentle wackiness with a young child,” he later wrote in his book, Loving Learning: How Progressive Education Can Save America’s Schools. “When speaking with children, she’ll rarely look down at them; instead, she squats or kneels to address them at eye level as she calls their attention to wonders they haven’t yet noticed. I realized right away that serving as Susan’s apprentice would teach me more than anything I’d learn in graduate school.” Little went on to head Park Day School for 27 years.

As for Erb, “I was never cut out to be a director. I was a teacher. A teacher who loved being a part of a collaborative experience in all of its frustrating, challenging, learning, thrilling, parts: Keeping our eyes on the prize of creating a dynamic, brave place of learning for kids and adults.”

A goal from the beginning, she said, was to have staff and students that reflected the diverse group of founding parents. But instead of student tests, they focused on progressive education ideals — social justice, collaborative learning, creative use of space (the school has gardens and a chicken coop), and community activism.

That included projects with Emerson Elementary, the nearby elementary school; and, until it closed in 2008, the Matilda Brown Home, the historic, 132-year-old assisted living facility for women, now part of Park Day’s campus. “We’d go over and read stories to the ladies which seemed to enliven their lives.”

Erb guided three generations of Mike McConnell’s family. “You send your child off to the care of a teacher, not a school,” McConnell said. “So, when another parent called to say Susan is unique; would you join us if she were willing to keep teaching our children in a new school? The answer was an enthusiastic yes. And sure enough, one by one, more wonderful, committed, dynamic teachers were added. But Susan was the prototype.”

“She was my smart, beloved teacher,” said daughter Ericka McConnell, a Rockridge resident and commercial photographer. “Susan was one of the primary reasons that I loved school. She had these traditions like Charlotte’s Web Day where we would dress up as animals,” and posters such as: In This Room It’s Okay to Make Mistakes.

“I got to revisit her teaching style, Ericka said, when daughter Flora Breitbard, now a high school senior, was in Erb’s first-grade class shortly before her retirement. Leaving teaching was a hard decision, said Erb. “I was so invested. We had gender-questioning kids at an early age. We were one of the first schools to open our thinking and to learn from them. I really did grow there. I had the privilege of being at that school.”

She also considers it a privilege to live in Rockridge where strolling along College Avenue gives her a sense of community. “I love the old-fashioned, family-owned business feel of Cole Hardware.” Her husband, Mark Levin, is a regular at Cole Coffee. “Thank goodness for the small stores and being able to walk everywhere,” Erb said, “that is Rockridge at its best.”

LETTER FROM RCPC CHAIR

Growing as a Community

Thank you to the nearly 450 residents who came out to vote in the RCPC elections. I'm humbled to have been re-elected and re-appointed Chair by our new board. RCPC welcomes five brand new board members who bring fresh ideas, have deep roots throughout the neighborhood, and bring professional expertise related to our neighborhood's most pressing issues of land use and growth — in addition to being active parents in Rockridge schools and/or safety advocates on their blocks.

Maison d'Etre to Reopen this Month

Pressed against the windows of Maison d'Etre, you may have noticed, is what stands between the currently closed doors and the store's promised spring reopening — boxes upon boxes of amazing goods. The owners are working hard to inventory, price, and arrange these goodies onto shelves, and promise it will be dazzling.

Opening day will be sometime later this month... stay tuned.

What can a small neighborhood association do?

A lot actually. Since its founding, RCPC has been a prominent voice for the entire neighborhood when talking to the decision makers in the City and beyond. Some shining examples from our history: Passing a special tax to create the Rockridge Library; co-leading negotiations with Safeway for a better project at the College/Claremont shopping center; and facilitating the creation of Frog Park and Hardy Dog Park. Last year, our letters to the City led to increased density on College Avenue and in the City's Housing Element.

Why did I run for RCPC?

I was frustrated by the cost of housing — both rental and ownership. I'm agitated by comments like, "my kids will never afford to live here" and I believe this problem calls for our action. Our housing crisis was caused by a lack of building housing, for many reasons, including community opposition to density. Like all of us, I've loved our neighborhood since the moment I stepped foot here. I revere our vibrant College Avenue, our beautiful streets, and our palpable sense of community. I believe more people deserve a chance to be part of this neighborhood and so I've stepped up to serve.

What's ahead of us?

State housing laws have changed greatly to make building housing easier. Public opinion has followed suit to support that housing growth, from ADUs one unit at a time, to larger opportunity sites, including CCA (the former arts college at Broadway and College). Growth is inevitable — its how we help shape it.

In the '90s, RCPC developed "The Rockridge Area Specific Plan." We're due for an update! Throughout 2024, RCPC seeks to develop a "Community Vision Plan" to collectively identify how we want our neighborhood to grow. Through a series of engagement opportunities and an online survey, we'll ask neighbors to weigh in on questions like, "How do you see Rockridge now?", "How do you envision it ten years in the future?," and, "What are your favorite and least favorite attributes of the neighborhood?"

We look forward to your thoughts and ideas. Sign up for updates here: bit.ly/VisionRockridge.

In addition to uplifting voices from throughout the neighborhood into the Community Vision Plan, my goals as Chair are to strengthen our partnerships with the merchants of the Rockridge District Association and to support a successful Kitchen Tour — our nonprofit's sole fundraiser and longstanding tradition (coming this fall). ■

CollegePrep
A private high school in Oakland

Tucked into a glen in the Rockridge neighborhood of Oakland, College Prep's informal and welcoming campus provides an educational home for a lively and talented community of students in grades 9-12. Guided by inspiring teachers and mentors, they create a vibrant community that is rooted in shared values of kindness, respect, and a willingness to learn from the perspectives of others. We invite you to visit us and experience College Prep first-hand.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

New Development Has No Plan for Safe Access

DEAR EDITOR: The latest version of the proposed development of the CCA campus seems to respond to many of the community's concerns. I have spent years on these grounds having been a student there in the '60s. Based on figures provided by the developer at the February 14 Zoom presentation, this project, when fully occupied, will bring approximately 760 residents, including children, to Rockridge.

I am concerned about the lack of any design considerations or site modifications regarding emergency vehicle access and the ability of people to escape in case of an emergency — earthquake, fires, or god forbid, a shooter.

The only egress from the long building proposed for the topmost portion of the site (Building B) is Clifton, a very narrow pedestrian street. A combination of fire trucks and ambulances, plus police cars trying to access people in need of emergency care would create an absolute mess. Plus, there is the apartment complex at 225 Clifton, with another 100 or so people, and, during the day, the students from Oakland Tech's Upper Campus on the north side of Clifton.

If this project is NOT revised to consider this possible situation, the resulting potential catastrophe could be worse than what we experienced back in 1989 AND put the property owners and the City of Oakland in major financial liability. Do we want Oakland to declare bankruptcy?

I feel that this plan as currently designed is extremely dangerous and needs to be revised to include a second major roadway that would allow safety vehicles to access more of the site. As currently proposed, the sole exit from Clifton onto Broadway will allow for only right turns onto Broadway, heading north, and since most people will want to go south into downtown or to the freeway, the intersection will create traffic jams at all hours with cut-through traffic directed into the small neighborhood streets, etc.

There seems to be another option that has not been mentioned by the developer and that is to create a second access road along the southern portion of the site. This would create an extension of Coronado, an intersection allowing left-hand turns from the site, and also quicker access from Fire Station #8 to the site.

I hope that the Oakland Fire Department, Oakland's Planning Department, Oakland's Planning Commission, and the Oakland City Council have the courage to speak up and make sure that the final design includes meaningful traffic mitigations that will provide Rockridge with a safe addition to our neighborhood. ■

Yellowjacket Traps — The Time is Now

DEAR EDITOR: Over the last couple of summers, the yellowjacket population in Rockridge seems to have exploded. Also known colloquially as “meat bees,” these pesky buggers are familiar to anyone who regularly tries to dine outdoors in the summer as they will show up quickly and make it difficult to enjoy a meal.

Even though there aren't many yellowjackets flying around yet this season, now is the best time of year to get traps out. Now that the weather has warmed up, queen yellowjackets that overwintered in the area are emerging to venture forth and establish new nests, and the very first workers born this year are already flying around to get those nests going. The Alameda County Vector Control (ACVC) has told me that every yellowjacket caught in the spring prevents approximately 1,000 from being born in summer.

I got my traps out in mid-March and am happy to report that within about a week they had caught about two dozen workers and one queen.

If you want to buy traps, I highly recommend either reusable or disposable models from the brand Rescue, which you can order online or find at most hardware stores. The reusable ones should last for years, and all you have to do is re-bait them every 10 weeks or so during the spring/summer. The disposables work for about 30 days and then can be thrown in your normal garbage. Both kinds should be removed in the fall/winter when they serve no purpose. These traps just include an attractant — no poison. The yellowjackets expire from heat/dehydration once they're in the trap. In my experience, they catch virtually no other insects, which I appreciate as well. Given the size of most of the lots in Rockridge, just one trap in a backyard should be effective at reducing the local yellowjacket population.

Yellowjackets will fly 1,000 feet from their nest to forage, so merely ensuring there are no nests in your yard is not sufficient. The more traps we have around the neighborhood, the more likely it is we'll prevent the formation of new nests, and the more likely we can all enjoy outdoor meals in peace.

If you do become aware of a yellowjacket nest in an outdoor area, know that Alameda County Vector Control will promptly respond and destroy it once they receive a report.

A yellowjacket nest was identified on my block last summer, formed in a hollow tree stump, and I'm happy to say that ACVC took care of it in a matter of days. To file a report with ACVC, check out this page: <https://acvcsd.org/request-service>. ■

Monk’s Kettle to Open this Fall in Rockridge

Monk’s Kettle will be moving this fall from San Francisco’s Mission District into the space formerly occupied by Citron, at 5484 College Avenue. The craft beer and wine tavern, which has another location in Terra Linda, is well-known for its award-winning fried chicken sandwiches and burgers. The SF location, which originally opened in 2007, will remain open through the summer with a final sale of rare and highly sought-after beers made from scratch before their final closing.

“In many ways, we are seeking a return to the beginning, to the time when we were surrounded by our community, to a time when that community was more stable, and, in particular, to a time when that community was more given to going out and experiencing the world through its restaurants, bars and shops. And we couldn’t be more excited about it,” says co-owner Christian Albertson.

The new location will feature an open floor plan, creating a big room for bar seating and dining. An over-head trellis and roof will allow for year-round seating in the large outside back deck. Reservations will be available through OpenTable. ■

RAY ARTS PORTFOLIO

IN MEMORIAM

Mary Catherine Haug

Mary Catherine Haug, known locally as MC, a Rockridge resident for more than 50 years, passed away peacefully on April 2nd. She was 80 years old.

MC moved to Rockridge (from Virginia) in the early 1970s when a lower-middle-class couple could still afford a two-story Craftsman for under $50k. She, along with her then-husband Arthur Robinson Boone, raised three children (William, Isabelle, and Phoebe Boone) and many neighborhood-friendly cats on Kales Avenue.

During her 45 years on Kales, MC experienced first-hand some of the big moments in Oakland history: the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake; and the 1991 Oakland Hills Firestorm. She remembered well the travels of the Rockridge Library as it moved from its original location to a temporary portable on the Claremont Middle School campus to its current home at College and Manila. She watched the transformation of the old bowling alley at the end of her street as it became a bookstore, and the countless restaurants that came and went over the years. She saw incredible change in the neighborhood, but her love for it never wavered.

MC loved Rockridge to her core. She believed in supporting small local businesses. She would line up on New Year's Day for the Pegasus calendar sale and was ecstatic when Cole Hardware moved in. For years she held court at Cole Coffee (having been a faithful customer since it was Royal Coffee and just had the tiny shop on 63rd), and once driving became difficult, she made it her goal to walk from her home to Chocolate Dragon or Hudson Bay Cafe every day for her daily caffeine fix and exercise.

But it wasn't just the businesses she loved. She loved the community. She was very social and some affectionately called her the "Mayor of College Avenue." Whether you knew her or not, you've likely interacted with her on her walks in the neighborhood, during her time serving on RCPC's board, or bundling the Rockridge News. She might've even checked you in for your blood donation appointment at the Red Cross on Claremont where she volunteered for many years.

And, even if you've never met MC, you have likely noticed her efforts if you have ever walked down Kales between College and Broadway. The magnificent London Plane trees that line the street were planted in the 1980s after MC collected signatures from Kales Avenue residents and petitioned the City of Oakland to plant the trees on the then-bare street. They are a testament to her long-standing love affair with Rockridge.

When MC needed to move to more senior-friendly accommodations, her most important criterion was to remain in her beloved Rockridge. She did not want to be far from her garden filled with fragrant freesias, her friends, or her favorite coffee shops and restaurants. She enjoyed her last few years at The Point with a spectacular view of the Bay from her 6th-floor apartment. On a clear day she could see the Bay Bridge, the Golden Gate Bridge, Mt. Tam, and the Campanile at UC Berkeley. She loved Oakland, and Rockridge above all, so please, if you feel it fitting, raise a glass of champagne or a breve latte in her honor — or plant a tree. She would love that too.

For information about her memorial service in August or to share condolences, her children can be reached at HaugMC@gmail.com. ■
