New Head Librarian For Rockridge Library

For the first time in 1-1/2 years, the Rockridge branch of the Oakland Public Library has a head librarian. She is Pat Lichter, a longtime librarian with extensive experience working in Bay Area libraries and with young people.

Although she lives in Albany, Pat says, "I've spent a lot of time in Rockridge. I can tell I'm going to love this community, and the building's gorgeous. I'm already having fun."

Marilyn Citron, chair of Friends of the Rockridge Library, says supporters are

District Redraw Plan Could Split Rockridge: RCPC Opposed

Strong opposition to a redistricting proposal that would have split Rockridge in half was voiced in a letter from the Rockridge Community Planning Council to Oakland Mayor Jerry Brown and members of the City Council. At a meeting last month, the Council appeared to be moving away from the drastic change.

The Council's original Plans A and B kept Rockridge intact, while Plan C1 proposed dividing Rockridge at Shafter/Keith (near Market Hall) and attaching the two sections to different council districts. "This shape seems particularly odd, and intended at some level to divide our neighborhood in two, both in terms of representation and in terms of neighborhood collaboration," RCPC Chair Glen Tripp said in his February letter. "It just does not make sense to split such a cohesive neighborhood."

Plan C1 proposes dividing Rockridge at Shafter/Keith (near Market Hall) and attaching the two sections to different council districts.

At a March 18 meeting, the Oakland City Council tentatively approved the Reid-de la Fuente compromise plan, which makes significant boundary changes in other districts but leaves Rockridge intact. A final report will be submitted for approval later this month. Full details on the redistricting plan are available at www.oaklandnet.com.

Every decade, political district boundaries are redrawn in response to population shifts. According to the 2000 Census, District 1, which now includes Rockridge, has grown by only 50 residents while the city of Oakland has grown much more rapidly. District 1 will need 3,172 additional residents to meet the new population standard, while other districts will need to lose residents.

Redistricting also affects state and national election units. However, because RCPC's concerns are primarily local, the impact of being in two different City Council districts would be much stronger.

Meet Councilmember Brunner

City Councilmember Jane Brunner talks about her North Oakland Livable Communities Project and asks: How can we make Rockridge a better place to live?

Brunner Has Questions, Plans For Rockridge Improvements

Rockridge is the model of a livable community that City Councilmember Jane Brunner had in mind when she launched her North Oakland Livable Communities Project, but "even though Rockridge is an extremely successful neighborhood, I believe we can make it better," she says.

At the Rockridge Community Planning Council's April 24 General Meeting, she'll be seeking ideas on how we could make Rockridge an even better place to live. The meeting will also include brief remarks by candidates for RCPC's board of directors, followed by voting at the meeting. Residents may also vote on Saturday, April 26 at the Rockridge Library. ## Around the Neighborhood

by Jacqueline Tasch, Editor, The Rockridge News

College Avenue Merchants: Always the Core of the Neighborhood

You don't have to live long in Rockridge to know that the lively merchant community on College Avenue is at its heart. Even before the area now identified as Rockridge came to be recognized, College Avenue was drawing the community together.

Growing up on Lawton Avenue in the 1920s, my neighbor Neva remembers lots of attractions on College Avenue: a Bank of America where Market Hall now stands, a Chimes Theater nearby, and a German deli that sold pickles and sausage. The streetcar to downtown Oakland ran up College, and Neva and her playmates would look down Lawton to see when the streetcar went by on College, then race up Broadway to catch it there.

Those were different times, of course. Instead of the recycling truck, the rag and bottle man came by from time to time. "Every Saturday a lady came to the house and washed our hair," Neva says, although she can't remember why that seemed necessary. Kids at the Alcatraz end of Rockridge went to The Pink School, a one-room school (named after its color) in the lot where Safeway shoppers now park. Neva and her friends went to the Claremont School—no Middle to it—which offered Grades 1 through 8.

After some time at the New England Conservatory of Music and a brief marriage, Neva soon returned to Oakland. In 1945, she came back to Rockridge, moving into a house on Ross Circle with her daughter and her mother—three generations sharing the house. Although Ross Circle started life as a mere driveway for the Ross farm, by the 1940s a number of houses had been built, most of them bigger and grander than the one Neva and her family occupied. B. F. Edwards, an executive with Bank of America, lived in the big house at 106 Ross—the first on the block—and prominent architect Worley Wong lived up the street, next door to the well-known painter, Jason Schoener. Neva's daughter Jacquelin had only one potential playmate on the mostly child-free block. Fortunately, they became good friends, enjoying the neighborhood's doings, especially visits by Ah Bing, who brought his horse-drawn wagon up Ross with produce and other treats.

Not that there weren't shops at this end of College, too, including a produce market and butcher at the corner of Florio. In a time before two coffee shops per block, students tended to hang out at the tables the pharmacy put out for patrons of its soda fountain. Neva has enjoyed the proliferation of restaurants on College, and she was such a fan of La Farine's morning buns that her photo hung on the wall there for a time.

"As far back as I can remember," Neva says (and that's going some), "College Avenue has been much the same as it is today. Lots of small shops with warm service and friendly people inside."

Which makes it especially hard to see shops closing on College Avenue—some of them longtime neighbors who've added to the quality of life in this special place. Elsewhere in this issue, you'll find a list of recent closings and a story about the departed Sierra Club bookstore.

I'd prefer to focus on the longtime neighbors who continue to fill our grocery bags, clean our clothes, cut our hair, and fix our cars and bikes. Some of you may have stories about Rockridge's longtime merchants and service businesses—those on the street for at least a decade or two. Others may have questions about how old favorites came to be. Please share your stories and questions. My mailbox awaits your words.

Bungalow Fever at RCPC Monthly Meeting

by Claire Isaacs

The Arts and Crafts Design Movement may have originated in England, but its influence spread widely throughout the United States between 1900 and 1930. This aesthetic movement was adapted to residential housing in the form of the Craftsman bungalow, a style of housing enormously popular in California and truly ubiquitous in Rockridge.

Thus, the people who attended RCPC's monthly meeting on Thursday evening, March 20, at the Rockridge Library, were absolutely glued to the brilliant slide lecture offered by author and Arts and Crafts expert Paul Duchscherer. Although the war in Iraq started that day, an eager crowd of neighbors abandoned the breaking news to learn about this beautiful period in home design. Using a large and exceptionally varied set of slides, Duchscherer traced the Craftsman bungalow style through the first three decades of the 20th century.

The word bungalow, explained Duchscherer, derived from the East Indian word, bangala, a native mud hut in India featuring heavily overhung roofs. The word was Anglicized during the English Raj. The first use of the word bungalow in America dates to about 1880. Here it describes small, cottage-like structures, usually one story. Some built low-rent bungalow complexes, especially in Southern California, and the wealthy commissioned custom bungalows and larger houses in the Craftsman style.

But most homes were built for middle class owners. Potential owners could order everything from floor plans to interior and exterior wall treatments, even special built-ins such as a sideboard, benches, bookshelves, and cabinets. Special add-ons included sleeping porches and sliding pocket doors to hide extra sleeping, studying or work space. These houses were attractively economical.

More important, "they offered a new kind of house for a new century," said Duchscherer. The long hallways and entry ways characteristic of Victorians disappeared. Visitors to a bungalow enter the living room itself and pass from room to room directly rather than through a hall. The Arts and Crafts influence can be seen in the way construction is exposed. Beams, columns and supports under the extended eaves were not covered with stucco, stone or wood.

For the rapt audience, this history of Rockridge's signature home style was pure delight. Those who missed this thorough and detailed presentation may look for books by Paul Duchscherer and his co-author, Douglas Keister: The Bungalow, Inside the Bungalow and Outside the Bungalow, as well as several on specific aspects such as fireplaces. They should be available in local Rockridge bookstores. Duchscherer's latest publication is Victorian Glory.

RCPC in April

describe themselves and their reasons for running on pages 4 and 5.)

Following are some of the questions Councilmember Brunner would like residents to consider:

- Are the streets in Rockridge walkable and do they feel safe?
- Are there enough high-quality programs and recreational opportunities for youth?
- What stores and services can you walk to from your home? What business would you like to see close by?

- How can we capitalize on what's good about your neighborhood to make Rockridge even better?

RCPC's General Meeting is one of several neighborhood meetings Brunner plans to hold as part of the North Oakland Livable Communities Project. At each, residents will be asked to describe their neighborhood's strengths and weaknesses and to identify the two most important projects. "To me, a Livable Community is a place where housing, schools, parks and shopping are all within easy walking distance, and convenient public transportation gets residents to jobs and social services in other communities," Brunner says.

"When I envisioned this project, I wanted to replicate the lessons and successes of Rockridge in every neighborhood in North Oakland," Brunner says. "North Oakland's neighborhoods are among the best in the Bay Area, but there is still much we can do to make them everything we want them to be."

Interested residents may attend the RCPC meeting or call Brunner's office at 238-7001.

Dan Ferdelman Claremont Avenue

For the past two years I have served on the RCPC Board and the RCPC Land Use Committee. I have worked with residents, the city of Oakland, property owners and developers to foster a satisfying built environment and good community. I would like to continue to serve our community and ensure it remains the dynamic and charming place we all love. I currently work for a residential architect in San Francisco as project manager and designer, but my education includes a degree in Community Planning. My experience includes working on residential and commercial remodels and new construction; I have also worked for community nonprofits and city development agencies. As a five-year resident of Rockridge, I appreciate the special nature of our community and if re-elected I will work toward the preservation and enhancement of our neighborhood.

David Hatfield Manila Avenue

I am running for re-election to the Rockridge Community Planning Council because my first year on the council has been enjoyable and there's more I'd like to do. In my first year on the RCPC, I became involved in our ongoing website redesign and also with the committee to explore the beautification of the exterior of the BART station. I was also recently named Editor-in-Chief of The Rockridge News. My wife and I are expecting our first child in July and we plan to make Rockridge our home for quite a few years. I'd like to be as involved as possible during that time.

Hiroko Kurihara 62nd Street

Our family moved into the neighborhood almost five years ago. We've come to know our neighbors and almost every merchant on College Avenue. Now, I'd like the opportunity to work on long-term issues that affect the livelihood of this vibrant neighborhood, like advocating for sustainable transportation plans and ensuring that there are more neighborhood-serving businesses. This year, I'm starting a skills and interests survey of my immediate neighborhood to help share stories and strengthen our community. My formal education is in textile design from the Rhode Island School of Design. I applied my skills towards urban design, then community economic development for the past 10 years, primarily in the not-for-profit field. I have experience on not-for-profit boards and commissions. Recently, I started a home-based socially responsible business that produces hand-made blankets and scarves. I feel blessed to be living in Rockridge with my husband, Jason, my 10-year-old son, Theo, and my 2-and-a-half-year-old daughter, Denali. I look forward to being part of the commitment and energy that the RCPC Board represents.

Jessica Pitt James Avenue

I have lived in Rockridge for the past four years and recently became a homeowner in the neighborhood. I work for a non-profit community development organization in Oakland and assist neighborhood organizations throughout the city to build their capacity to shape local development. I would like to become more involved in my own community and bring my experience and skills in neighborhood development to Rockridge. This year, I served on the District I Community Development Board, which recommends allocations for Oakland's Community Development Block Grant funds. As an RCPC board member, I would seek to encourage opportunities for neighborhood residents to become more involved in decisions that affect our community, and to build a stronger sense of community among Rockridge residents.

John Potis College Avenue

I am volunteering to serve on the RCPC Board because, as a landscape architect, I would like to continue to see excellent land use in the Rockridge neighborhood. It's important to assure that neighborhood projects, especially larger scale projects like Dreyers, Market Hall and the CCAC dormitory, devote as much attention to site design as they do to building design. Common areas such as the BART Station, the 51st Street median, and neighborhood parks and playgrounds need regular review to assure they meet safety, utility and aesthetic standards. Further, if resistance to a fourth Caldecott bore fails, land use must be an essential part of mitigation. I would appreciate your vote and promise to work hard for the good of the community.

Glen Tripp Hillegass Avenue

I joined the RCPC Board two years ago shortly after moving here with my family. In my first year, I involved myself with recruiting volunteers for the big FROGpark build and helping to create the community service grant for schools that was recently awarded to North Oakland Community Charter School. I was elected Chair in my second year and have since involved myself mostly in the duties of organizing the monthly board meetings, recruiting new volunteers, helping the organization set its strategic priorities, and enjoying being a new father. In the next two years, I'd like to focus even more on the idea of connecting interested neighbors with community service opportunities. Additionally, I'd like to support the UnderBART project and the completion of Phase II of the Rockridge-Temescal Greenbelt. Thanks for your support.

Greg Yoch Shafter Avenue

My name is Greg Yoch. My wife Ahroon and I have lived on Shafter Avenue in Rockridge for about a year. I've been a resident of the Bay Area since 1996. My professional background is in business, specifically marketing, sales and consulting. I am currently the Director of Retail Sales and Marketing at Niman Ranch in Oakland. I'm thrilled with the Rockridge neighborhood and all it has to offer. My goal is to be more connected with the people of this community and make it even a better place. I would like to do that by applying my leadership, creativity, and organizational skills to the RCPC. One of my first objectives is to organize fun, informal events to promote greater social connection between residents.

The Rockridge Kitchen Tour Committee has had the pleasure of being invited into a number of neighborhood homes as we continue the selection process for kitchens to feature in the fall tour. Suffice it to say that the temporary inconvenience of cooking on a camping stove in the garage and washing dishes in the bathroom sink has resulted in many stunning renovations to Rockridge kitchens, and we look forward to a spectacular tour on September 28.

The tour has become a Bay Area favorite since its inception in 1995, and much of its success is due to the enthusiasm

April 19: FROG Community Day Offers Opportunity

by Carroll Moore

If you and your kids have spent happy times at Hardy or Redondo playgrounds, or you can take an hour or so to do a little neighborhood spring cleaning, one golden opportunity is the Friends of the Rockridge-Temescal Greenbelt (FROG) semi-annual Community Day on April 19. We need help to sweep the walkways and play structures, rake the groundcover, sift the sandboxes, collect trash and do other family-friendly tasks. Bring children of all ages for an hour or the whole day – anytime between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. There will be something for everyone to do.

Rockridge and Temescal had no community playgrounds until October 2001, when more than 1,300 volunteers labored side-by-side to build the park play structures. In those sad and uncertain days after 9/11, FROGpark was a place for us to work and be together, joined in community by a powerful and peaceful task. The work continues, and everyone can still be a FROGpark volunteer.

As part of FROG'S negotiations with the city, the community agreed to help keep the play areas and structures in good shape. During Community Days in the spring and fall, we add new features, clean the play structures and grounds and do needed repairs. The work provides another chance for us to join in common cause.

When you come to the Hardy or Redondo Parks, please bring work gloves, a water bottle, rake, broom and hand whisk if possible. You may want to label your belongings so they don't get mixed up with others. Bring your own lunch for a picnic in the park from 12 to 1 p.m. Beverages and dessert will be provided for all volunteers. If you can bring a dessert for the group, please contact Kate at 658-7833.

This workday will also be your last opportunity to make your own ceramic tile to decorate the playground. "We had such a tremendous response to the tile-making fundraiser, we've already nearly filled the playground fencing with tiles," says tile-making volunteer Karen Cheever. The tile-making ($25 each) will take place near the Hardy Park play structure. Don't forget your checkbooks.

Contact carroll@arcadiaworks.com if you have questions or need more information.

FROG Playgrounds Free of Carcinogenic Wood

In February 2003, the Consumer Products Safety Commission issued a report acknowledging the health risks associated with common "pressure treated" CCA (chromated copper arsenate) lumber. Since the 1970s, much of the wood used for playgrounds, decks and other outdoor construction has been treated with pesticides that contain arsenic or other carcinogens. These carcinogens leach from the wood and create significant health risks when contacted, including an increased incidence of bladder and lung cancer.

The FROG playgrounds do not contain CCA treated wood. Responsible alternatives, including ChoiceDeck (recycled plastic lumber), ACQ Preserve (non-toxic exterior lumber) and other environmentally sound materials were consciously used, and the playgrounds do not pose a carcinogenic risk to any users. Visit www.leathersassociates.com for more information about the safe materials used throughout the FROG playgrounds, and go have fun at the park!

FROGpark Offers Materials Surplus

If you're planning to build a deck for your backyard or if other projects are on your spring agenda, the FROG-park playground project has surplus lumber at heavily discounted prices—and it is environmentally responsible and non-toxic (no arsenic!). The wood is pressure-treated 2x4 and 2x6 lumber suitable for decking and other weather-exposed construction. You'll not only save lots of money by buying from FROG, your purchase will help fund other community projects. For information, call Jimmy Pedersen at 652-8440.

April 19: Temescal Creek and 51st Street Cleanup

Get a head start on Earth Day celebrations

Two local groups are organizing volunteers to spruce up our public areas in time for spring. While official Earth Day activities elsewhere in the Bay Area are taking place on April 22, Oakland crews will hit the streets on April 19.

by Jacqueline Hoepfner-Freitas, Chair, DMV Neighbors Association

Temescal Creek and neighboring areas on 51st Street are targets for Earth Day volunteers in North Oakland on April 19, in a cleanup is sponsored by the DMV Neighbors Association (DNA), under the City of Oakland's Adopt-a-Creek Program. The nearby Colombo Club, an Italian neighborhood organization established in the 1920s, will provide the pasta part of a potluck for workers after the job is done.

At 9 a.m., volunteers for the creek-and street-cleaning projects should sign in at Temescal Creek in the Department of Motor Vehicles parking lot at Claremont and Cavour. Tasks will include weeding, raking, picking up debris, sweeping, pruning, and cutting back ivy. Creek volunteers should wear boots because of the wet creek bed. Fifty-first Street volunteers will work between Telegraph and Lawton Avenues.

The City will supply some gloves, garbage bags, and tools (rakes, hoes, shovels, brooms, loppers, etc.). However, volunteers are urged to bring their favorite, well-marked tools and gloves in case city supplies run out. In addition, wheelbarrows are always welcome because green waste is stacked, not bagged.

When the work is done—about noon—the DNA-Colombo Club-sponsored potluck will take place at 5275 Redondo, across Cavour from the DMV. Donations of side dishes such as green salad or fruit salad are always appreciated. The Colombo Club brings pasta and garlic bread; the DNA will supply dessert and beverages.

Sierra Club Bookstore Closes After 25 Years on College

by Claire Isaacs

A familiar, friendly, even funky little bookstore run by the local Sierra Club Chapter at 6014 College Avenue shut its doors permanently March 15. Rumors and other signs of impending demise had spread for at least two months. A few weeks ago, when the volunteers who staffed the store stopped accepting donated books for their ongoing $1 outdoor sale, it was obvious the end had come.

"In this time of recession and difficult conditions for all independent bookstores, our bookstore has been losing an increasing amount of money. This, alas, cuts into the funds available for the Chapter's conservation mission," The Sierra Club's newsletter, The Yodeler, explained in its March issue.

A few days before it closed, customers wandered forlornly through the shop, its shelves nearly emptied by a sale at 40% off. Among the leftovers: an atlas of India, a map of Hungary, snowy Christmas card scenes, stacks of 2003 Sierra Club Calendars, and stationery made of recycled paper. Fairs and Festivals of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio might have a limited local audience, but others seemed to have more appeal, for example, Conversations with Eminent Women in Science or California Bass Angling Guide. And there were also one-of-a-kind gems like Road Frames, the American Highway Narrative, by Kris Lackey, which described a 63-day journey across America in 1903. The "first public account of a transcontinental automobile journey," it appeared only 33 years after the death of the last surviving member of the Lewis and Clark Expedition.

Presiding over the store's demise was part-time co-manager Iris Goldman, a volunteer for many years, who consoled visitors and explained the reasons behind the closure between hugs and tears.

When it rented the College Avenue space 25 years ago, the Sierra Club's San Francisco chapter wanted office space, but the C-31 zoning for College Avenue requires that street-level space be operated for retail purposes. Thus the shop was opened, showcasing the Sierra Club's many beautiful publications, calendars, and cards as well as offering a wide variety of materials on ecology, natural history, science, conservation and travel.

Ed Bennett, long-time Executive Board member and now assistant treasurer of the Sierra Club chapter, said income peaked at $300,000 a year, just before the Oakland Firestorm of 1991. As residents left the area while houses were rebuilt, store sales dropped. For the last several years, sales have been about $200,000 at best.

Meanwhile, the rent began to creep up, 5% to 7% a year, said Bennett. The original landlord had sympathized with the Sierra Club's cause and kept the rent low. His sons and heirs felt obliged to maximize the return on the property.

Finally the line was crossed, as income fell below expenses.

"There are more and more conservation issues to deal with all the time, requiring more funds," said Bennett. In addition to the campaign to keep oil drilling out of parts of the Arctic Refuge, the Sierra Club has been working to establish the East Shore State Park, and is concerned with plans to develop the Albany Race Track and Franklin Canyon. Bennett said that the board decided that funds to keep the store open would be better spent on conservation and membership activities.

The Sierra Club Chapter now has offices in Berkeley at 2530 San Pablo between Dwight and Blake. The fight to retain open space in the Bay Area, pay for Environmental Impact Reports, and support environmentally minded public officials goes on.

Nevertheless, Rockridge will miss the little "green" hangout on College, a victim of changing times.

Finding Time for Art In Times of War

With our political leaders focused on war, and government budgets going to support waging it, our arts community finds itself sadly neglected—not an unusual experience. But the arts will survive. Try to eliminate them and you might as well tell the world to stop breathing. In fact, tough times tend to reveal the valuable contributions of the arts to help sustain our spirits and distill some meaning from all the chaos and confusion around us.

Look around you for art exhibits—for example, To Conjure a Language at the Pro Arts Gallery Downtown—and poetry readings or plays that respond to war. Everyone can engage in art themselves—so use painting or writing or photography or crafts to express your powerful feelings. Make beauty, not war.

It's important to find time to enjoy or participate in artistic expression—and important as well to contribute resources that support the arts. Here are a couple of opportunities:

Elizabeth House Art Auction

The dedicated volunteers who operate Elizabeth House on Colby Street know that art and music can be great healers.

by Ortrun Niesar

Elizabeth House serves as a temporary haven for disadvantaged women and their children. Director Courtenay Redis takes every opportunity to enrich the lives of her community with art. When I visited, the walls were covered with art works and photographs, and the kids had just finished their afternoon music lessons.

Somehow Courtenay never has a shortage of artists willing to donate their time and talent. As Elizabeth House looks to raise funds this year, many artists are stepping forward to help out. On Saturday, April 26, an art exhibit/ auction and dessert reception at Holy Redeemer Center in Oakland will benefit the women and children at Elizabeth House. Women artists, among them Rockridge artists Karen LeGault, Carol Aust, Claire Lomax and Elizabeth Opalnik, will donate most of the works to be auctioned. If anyone wants to donate more art, attend the auction or volunteer, call Elizabeth House at 658-1380 or visit their web site at www.oakehouse.org.

Park Day School Garden Tour

On Sunday, April 27, Park Day School will hold its 17th annual fundraiser, Secret Gardens of the East Bay. This year, the emphasis is on gardens designed for outdoor living, featuring the work of some of the Bay Area's most noted garden designers. The tour will benefit scholarship and academic programs at Park Day School located at 370 43d Street. For more information and tickets call the Garden Tour Hotline 653-6250 or look up www.secretgardentour.org.

Feather River Arts Camp

The Annual Adult Arts Camp sponsored by the Oakland Parks and Recreation Department at the Oakland Feather River Camp near Quincy will take place this year from July 20 to 27. The cost is extremely reasonable, and the setting is spectacular. Classes will be taught in painting, pottery, writing, guitar, meditation, papermaking, musical instrument making, nature photography and more. Wow! And we didn't even know this was available to us. To take advantage of this hidden treasure, call Karen LeGault, 510/601-1619, or e-mail her at klegault@jps.net. Karen is co-director of the camp.

Rockridge Photo Exhibition

NOTE: The dates for this year's exhibition are September 21 to October 31. Please call Lydia Gans, 658-4445, or e-mail me at oniesar@aol.com if you would like to participate.

Librarian

“thrilled to welcome new Rockridge branch manager Pat Lichter. We look forward to working with her, and we know she will be an asset to the branch.”

Rockridge’s good fortune in getting a full-time leader is ironically a result of Oakland’s budget problems, a crisis that just weeks ago threatened to close or reduce services at some branches. Instead, most of the cuts were made at the downtown branch. Pat’s position directing programs in the Children’s Room was restructured, and she was transferred to Rockridge.

She’s getting a warm welcome there from old friends and colleagues. Gay Ducey, who has been acting head librarian, is also a children’s librarian, and the two have worked together on projects in the past, including Head Start training. Pat has also worked on special projects with Erica Siskind, Gay’s partner as Rockridge’s children’s librarian.

As it happened, to fill in for a sick staffer, Pat spent part of her first day in Rockridge doing a Saturday story time. “It’s already obvious to me that Rockridge parents are enthusiastic readers,” she says, “and they share their love of books with their children from a very early age.”

Staffing the reference desk—there is an unfilled reference librarian’s position—Pat has learned that Rockridge’s adult customers are well-read and interested in politics, particularly in these troubling times.

Pat brings to her job experience as “pretty much every kind of librarian,” working with children and teens and as reference librarian and branch manager over a career more than two decades long. Talking about her new job, she shows an enthusiasm that’s not always associated with veterans: “I had a friend over just to show off the library,” she says, “to stroll around the neighborhood and smell the flowers.”

North Oakland Neighbors For Peace

by Lydia Gans

From the whimsical display in Scout's window featuring "Weapons of Mass Decoration," to the person who tossed rocks through that window, to the many people who wrote messages of support on the board that temporarily covered the window, there are strong feelings aplenty about the war in Iraq.

When five Rockridge neighbors called a meeting March 1 at the Rockridge Library to talk about peace, 30 people showed up. Many ideas for actions were proposed, committees were formed, a preliminary mission statement was formulated. It was agreed to expand to include the Temescal area, and North Oakland Neighbors for Peace was off and running.

At the next meeting a week later, the mission statement was agreed on. "We are neighbors joining together to actively and unconditionally oppose the intended war against Iraq by educating and organizing our community and other neighborhoods to spread the anti-war message."

On March 16, hundreds of neighbors joined in a candlelight vigil at the Rockridge BART station as part of a worldwide plea to stop the move to war. With the war under way, North Oakland Neighbors for Peace initiated a variety of activities including an informational evening at Diesel Bookstore with Norman Solomon and Reese Erlich on April 10 (details: Community Calendar), a petition drive, informal house meetings to talk about the war and aftermath, leafleting, street theater and more.

Jack Gerson, one of those who called the first meeting, declared, "The obscene amount of money going to the Pentagon ought to be going to rebuild our cities, into housing, into mass transit. But instead, these essential services are being cut to the bone and the money is being used to fuel the war machine." Responding to those who feel that since the war has started we should support our troops, Frank Fried, another of the original members, pointed out that "the best thing we can do to support our troops is to bring them home, alive, quickly."

This is a time for people to connect with each other, to talk, to inform themselves and to act in whatever way moves them. North Oakland Neighbors For Peace offers an opportunity to do so. For information call 658-5520 or 843-0599.

Hillside School Provides Safe Harbor for Education

by Janet Somers

High on a hidden cul-de-sac above Chabot Road sits a terraced vegetable garden, decorated with handpainted tiles and framed by a curlicued arbor.

In a low-lying, nondescript modern building at the foot of the garden sit the expelled students, juvenile offenders and foster care kids who built and tend it—students at Rock La Fleche Community Day School, one of a handful of “alternative education” programs administered by the county.

Rock La Fleche probably doesn't exist on most Rockridge residents' radar screens. It moved to the Chabot Road site seven years ago from East Oakland, into a building that previously housed another school and was already named “Rock La Fleche,” after a former Alameda County superintendent of schools. The school's population – usually numbering 50 to 60 – consists of expelled students, abused or neglected teens living in foster care or group homes, and kids on probation for crimes ranging from sexual harassment to pulling a knife on someone. Most are boys, and most are African American.

Over the years since Rock La Fleche's arrival, groups of neighbors have held meetings with police and school officials about car thefts, break-ins and other problems they believe are the fault of its students. “Since the school came in, we've had nothing but problems,” said one neighbor.

But Kelly Robinson, who runs the school's garden program and teaches its nutrition class, said, “If folks knew the children, they wouldn't have the same idea. I'd say, hey, walk up the hill, come see this beautiful garden, this beautiful archway that the kids made. The garden isn't vandalized, the garden isn't destroyed, and the kids spend all day here!”

It would be difficult to determine how much crime in the area actually has been caused by Rock La Fleche's hapless pupils; various neighbors, police and the school administration all have different perceptions of the issue. “There's nothing wrong with a black kid walking up and down my street,” said one neighbor, speaking anonymously. “I think we're being paranoid.”

Even fearful neighbors, though, might find reason for hope in several programs that began last year. All students are now transported to and from the closed campus by van. The county also has formed a partnership with Seneca Center, a Bay Area nonprofit organization that provides care for seriously troubled children. Seneca has provided a new principal, an onsite therapist and four mental health assistants to do classroom interventions: like when one student starts pushing his chair back and forth, and the others follow suit, and pretty soon they're all pushing their chairs back and forth and laughing, and suddenly five kids have disappeared from the room. Monitors now deal with such situations, leaving the teachers free to teach.

Despite some clowning around, most of the students observed during a recent visit were well-groomed and polite. Students walked the hallways purposefully, without the sunglasses and hats one neighbor said they wore in previous years.

During Ms. Robinson's nutrition class, one student repeatedly grasped her hands as she walked by, at one point getting down on his knees and gazing into her eyes, longing for attention; Ms. Robinson responded with kindness, rubbing his hands while she continued the classroom discussion. She and fellow staff members consider giving affection part of the job.

Shannon and David, 12th-graders whom the administration picked this year to be student body president and vice-president, respectively, don't like the new behavior-modification program instituted by Seneca Center last August. "This is like a prison," said David. "We get searched when we walk in the door." And Shannon had a bitter complaint: "I don't feel like I'm being treated right at all," he said. "I sometimes get the feeling, coming here, some of the teachers, they don't want to see us." The two are particularly angry at having had their classroom Brita water taken away after the whole class used it to cool themselves off by pouring it over their heads one hot day. Now they have to drink what they call

"nasty faucet water."

There's one part of the school that both enjoy, though: working in the school's garden, a joint venture with the California College of Arts and Crafts and the California Nutrition Network. "It's the most fun I've ever had," said Shannon. "We got tomatoes, we got everything."

At first, the kids weren't interested in gardening and were mystified by fresh vegetables. Now they're harvesting five kinds of lettuce each week and eating it, along with other vegetables, at the student-run salad bar.

Ms. Tarango, the school's social worker, says her reward comes when a student leaves the school with a life plan—what she likes to call a "map." David has one already: he wants to attend Chabot College, then a four-year college. "I want to be at least an electrician," he says.

Shannon hopes to attend Brooks College in Long Beach and become a film-maker. His life plans include a left-handed compliment to the school: referring to the movie about the prison on Alcatraz Island, he said, "First movie I'm going to make, I'm going to make it about this place. It'll be called 'The Rock.'" of community volunteers, many of whom return year after year to help out. This year we have openings on the publicity, photography, food, flower and raffle committees and we are, of course, looking for docents to show off our kitchens. All our volunteers will be treated to a preview of the kitchens that appear on our tour, but that's just part of the reward.

Helping the Rockridge Community Planning Council raise funds to continue its work on behalf of the Rockridge neighborhood is the added bonus!

If you've got only a few hours (or a few more) we'd like to have you on board to make this year's tour the best yet. To find out which job may suit you or to recommend a special kitchen for the tour, call Deborah Larson at 547-3855. To volunteer as a docent, call Nancy Sale at 655-4625.

RCPC would have to familiarize two different sets of Council staff members with planning and zoning issues on College, depending on whether the project is on College near Berkeley or on College by Market Hall.

"We are all volunteers working to make our City a better place, and this would effectively double the volunteer time our neighbors must spend on issues, thus reducing our effectiveness and ability to effect positive change," Tripp said in his letter.
