On the Nature and Likelihood of Soundwalls Coming to Rockridge

City Discusses Study Process, Soundwall Technology With Residents

by Andy Charman, RCPC chair

More than 80 Rockridge residents crowded into the Rockridge Library meeting room on September 27 to hear about soundwalls and the process that might lead to their construction in the Rockridge area.

Organized by the city of Oakland, the meeting presented a wealth of technical information on sound wall functionality, the sound wall study process, landscaping considerations and the preliminary technical report evaluating noise levels in Rockridge.

Following overviews by Zac Wald, chief of staff for Councilmember Jane Brunner, and Victoria Eisen, consultant to the city for the settlement project process, Wlad Wlassowsky, head of Oakland's transportation services division, talked about funding and the projects. He explained that the decision facing the city and the neighborhood was not about building soundwalls, but whether to do the additional studies known as Noise Barrier Scope Survey Reports (NBSSR) needed prior to construction decisions.

Studies for two sections of SR 24 in Rockridge – eastbound from Vicente Way to Broadway and westbound between Ross Street and Telegraph Avenue – could proceed if supported by a two-thirds majority of affected property owners (generally the first two rows of residences along the freeway). This is the same level required for other transportation projects on residential blocks, such as permit parking and speed humps.

Caltrans engineer Glenn Kinoshita said soundwalls could be most effective for residents whose line-of-sight to freeway traffic would be blocked by a soundwall 10-14 feet high. For other residents, a change in sound volume is possible, but likely not noticeable.

Kinoshita said various soundwall designs are approved by Caltrans. More expensive than masonry walls, transparent soundwalls were justified on I-580 in San Leandro because their lighter weight did not require retrofitting the elevated superstructures. In Rockridge, there is too little space bordering the freeway to use trees or other vegetation as natural sound barriers.

Invited to comment or ask questions, two residents said the study money, drawn from the $8 million Caltrans settlement with the city, would be better spent on other

Bicycles and the Safety of Oakland Pedestrians

by Karen Ivy, NCPC secretary

At the September meeting of the Greater Rockridge Neighborhood Crime Prevention Council (NCPC) meeting, residents complained again about bicyclists riding on College Avenue sidewalks, often nearly running people down. Elderly residents are concerned, as are women with young children.

When challenged, these bicyclists often say, "But it's perfectly legal." It is not perfectly legal. The NCPC hears this complaint regularly. A former Problem Solving Officer (PSO) used to run occasional "bicycle busts" to control the practice.

MYTH: It's legal to ride bicycles on the sidewalk in Oakland.

FACT: FALSE. Oakland Municipal Code (OMC) §10.150.16A says: "No person shall ride a bicycle which has wheels of twenty (20) inches or greater in diameter or a frame of fourteen (14) inches or greater in length on any sidewalk within the city.

This prohibition shall not be applicable to Oakland police officers operating a bicycle while engaged in their assigned duties."

So only police officers and small children on small bicycles may legally ride on the sidewalk.

MYTH: You don't have to have a license to ride a bicycle in Oakland.

FACT: FALSE. OMC §12.60.010 says: "It is unlawful for any person to operate or use a bicycle, defined in Section 39000 of the California Vehicle Code, upon any street in the city of Oakland without first obtaining a California Bicycle License therefor."

The problem with this ordinance, and other sections of OMC §12.60 (Streets, Sidewalks, and Public Places – Bicycles), is that the code is not enforced. The ordinance states that the Police Chief is authorized to issue annual bicycle licenses (§12.60.020), ensure that licenses are attached to bicycles and that the loss of a bicycle license be reported (§12.60.030). The police don't have the resources to enforce these codes.

In Rockridge, College Avenue, the major north-south artery, has no bicycle lanes – it's too narrow. Many cyclists apparently choose to ride on the sidewalk for its perceived comparative safety: Adding cyclists to College Avenue's pedestrian crowd increases the likelihood for bicycle-pedestrian accidents.

Are there solutions? The NCPC would like to see signs on College Avenue stating that cycling on the sidewalk is illegal.

In areas without formal bicycle lanes, cyclists should detour to the many nearby

Oct 16 Date for College Avenue Safeway Project Appeal

The City Council hearing on Safeway's College Avenue Shopping Center project is tentatively set for October 16. RCPC and a group of Berkeley residents each appealed the Planning Commission's July 25 approval of the project.

In July 2012, almost exactly two years after release of the draft EIR, the city released the final EIR, including responses to public comments. The Final EIR did not acknowledge any deficiencies in the draft analysis. At a three-hour Planning Commission hearing, Rockridge and Berkeley residents and business owners lambasted the EIR and the project, and pled for consideration of a reduced-size project. Safeway insisted it needed all the space it had asked for. The city's planner, Peterson Vollman, recommended approval, and said he expected Berkeley would eventually accept the mitigation measures proposed in the EIR, which, he asserted, would mitigate all the project's traffic impacts. The commission disregarded the protests and approved the project.

The October 16 hearing will be the last chance for the city to reconsider its decision on the project.

Will the Council pay any more attention to the community's concerns about traffic, parking, and the disregard for zoning requirements than the Planning Commission did? If not, the next step would be litigation.

Help Safeway/College Appeal; Donate to Legal Defense Fund

Do you believe the proposed Safeway project is just too big for beleaguered, two-lane College Avenue? Do you think it will overwhelm the neighborhood, threaten nearby small businesses, and/or worsen already congested traffic flows?

The RCPC board shares your concerns, and suspects the issue may ultimately play out in the courts. This could be expensive.

In the past, RCPC has used legal means to push for a better design of the Dreyer's building, and to help win funds for the community and public schools to mitigate Caldecott Tunnel Fourth Bore project impacts. Similar steps may be necessary to encourage Safeway to listen to community concerns; your support will be critical.

RCPC has established the Rockridge Legal Defense Fund to prepare for legal costs. If Safeway's plans and power concern you, please send a check, or use the donate button on the RCPC website. Donations are tax deductible; all donations are welcome.

Mail checks to RCPC, 4123 Broadway, PMB 311, Oakland, CA 94611. Make online donations at www.rockridge.org. (Tax ID no. 94-3011284).

Funds not used for legal fees connected with this project will be retained for future cases when RCPC may need legal help to uphold meaningful zoning regulations for the neighborhood.

Numbers Tell the Story: DMV Neighbors Creek to Bay Clean-Up

by Leonora Sea, DMV Neighbors chair

Bright and early on September's Creek to Bay Day, lively and enthusiastic volunteers from all over the neighborhood and the larger community arrived at the DMV Neighbors Association check-in site on Temescal Creek. Armed with rakes and brooms, shovels and hoes, trimmers and shears, they spread out along the creek from the Redondo tot lot past the DMV offices to Clifton Street, and accomplished an astonishing amount of good work.

By the numbers: 92 volunteers spent 3 hours, removed 2 tons of plant debris, trash, and recyclables, ate 60 Bakesale Betty pastries, drank 30 cups of Alem's Coffee and 6 gallons of water, and seemed to have an infinite amount of fun.

Warm thank-yous to the Cub Scouts, Girl Scouts, OneBridge, Park Day School, students from UC Berkeley, and all the other volunteers who gave their Saturday morning to care for the creek.

Neighborhood volunteers take a break from Temescal Creek cleaning. /LEONORA SEA

Many thanks also to Chris Staller of Oakland's Public Works Department (DPW), who welcomed volunteers at the sign-in table, and to Luciano Cortes-Nicolas, also of DPW and the park's regular gardening angel, who managed the extensive debris-bag pickup.

Check out the Oakland North Website for a slideshow of the DMV Neighbors Association Temescal Creek cleanup. And, come take a stroll along the creek: Enjoy the changes autumn brings.

FROG Park Support: A Constant Presence FROG Fall Maintenance Day

Saturday, September 22 was annual maintenance day at FROG Park. One hundred students and teachers from College Preparatory School and a dozen community volunteers cleaned the path, sifted sand, swept the basketball courts, removed graffiti from the kiosk and sealed wood structures (playground, fence and kiosk). (See volunteer group photo, page 5.) We also unclogged a main drain in Hardy playground and, with the help of our city gardener, Luciano Cortes, made a quick fix.

FROG Park is an ongoing project for the community, and maintaining it is key to the facilities being available for children and families to use and enjoy safely. Check on upcoming maintenance work days and

I AND OTHERS SUPPORT COLLEGE SAFEWAY PLANS; RCPC IS NOT THE SOLE VOICE OF THE NEIGHBORHOOD

EDITOR:

Having grown up in Rockridge and having lived here most of my life, I consider myself a "neighbor" and part of the "neighborhood." So I had to shake my head (again) when I saw the headline of the September Rockridge News: "College Ave Project: Safeway, 1; Neighborhood, Zip".

My husband and I support the renovation and expansion of Safeway on College, and we know many other Rockridge residents who feel the same way. That store has been cramped and difficult to maneuver since the 1960s and my mother (also a Rockridge resident and Safeway expansion supporter) avoided it whenever possible. I've attended meetings and paid close attention to the evolution of the designs Safeway has presented, and have been impressed with the way Safeway has addressed neighborhood concerns and incorporated suggestions from critics. I very much look forward to a better utilization of that triangular parcel and what is currently an ugly parking lot.

I would appreciate RCPC not pretending to be the sole voice of "the neighborhood" and at least acknowledging that not every neighbor is opposed to this project.

— Star Lightner

RCPC BOARD REPLIES: WE SUPPORT A THOUGHTFUL REMODEL

The RCPC board is aware that some community members support the Safeway on College project as proposed. But surveys of customers and nearby residents have indicated that a large majority of respondents prefer a smaller store. The board itself is not opposed in principle to enlarging and upgrading the aging store, but we are advocating for a size and design more in line with the scale and character of the neighborhood, and more consistent with the spirit and letter of our pedestrian-oriented zoning.

RCPC's concern (and that of survey respondents) is that the oversized store that Safeway insists on will generate oversized impacts, exacerbating already awful traffic on College Avenue, adding to cut-through traffic problems on neighborhood streets, worsening air quality and noise pollution, threatening pedestrian and bicycle safety, discouraging pedestrian activity on Claremont and College avenues, and endangering the economic vibrancy of the small shops across the street during still precarious economic times.

With plans also set in motion to re-build a very large Safeway store on nearby Pleasant Valley Road, we believe the size of the proposed expansion on College Avenue is as unnecessary as it is misguided. Safeway seems to be doubling down on an outdated and misplaced obsession with a large, suburban-style, automotive-oriented store on College Avenue just as it is facing internal financial challenges and increasing outside competition, and the industry as a whole is moving locally and nationally to smaller stores in urban settings.

As for "the way Safeway has addressed neighborhood concerns and incorporated suggestions," the RCPC board remains underwhelmed. Although some much needed design changes have been adopted, Safeway discontinued the public stakeholder process some time ago, and has never shown any willingness to negotiate regarding the primary concern of RCPC and the local neighbors, namely the sheer size of the store and its concomitant impacts. Last month's scorecard in The Rockridge News was intended to highlight how neither Safeway nor the Oakland Planning Commission has responded adequately to this overarching issue.

SOUNDWALL STUDY A GOOD USE OF FOURTH BORE SETTLEMENT FUNDS

EDITOR:

I am delighted that, at long last, our lower Rockridge neighborhood will have a chance to get soundwalls to reduce the ever-present freeway noise we live with 24/7. For years my neighbors and I have tried to get soundwalls, but CalTrans had no interest in responding to the noise pollution created when they built Highway 24 through the middle of this dense neighborhood. The effects of the fourth bore of the Caldecott Tunnel made CalTrans have to listen to us; we were glad that the settlement with Oakland included funding for some soundwall studies.

All we're asking for is the same consideration given to large suburban housing tracts, protected by giant soundwalls even though the nearest home is sometimes 1,000 feet from the freeway. In Rockridge, we have homes as close as 20 feet to the freeway. Our beloved Frog Park is built under the freeway, affected by the extraordinary noise overhead, and by falling debris. These problems would be solved with soundwalls, and would make the area more pleasurable for all of us. And we know that these are not going to be large brick walls found in suburban areas; they will likely be the less-costly, safer transparent walls suitable for overhead freeways.

This is a good use of the CalTrans settlement funding some of us fought hard to obtain. Getting full studies done is important.

Tech Drama Invites the Public to Fall Production: "Metamorphosis"

Oakland Technical High School's fall 2012 Drama class production is Mary Zimmerman's astounding play "Metamorphosis." Based on the transformative tales told by the Roman poet Ovid some 2,000 years ago, these stories of love, greed, loss, pride, life and death still touch the heart. Oakland Tech invites the public to evening performances on October 24, 25, 26 and 27 at 7 p.m., and a matinee show on October 27 at 2 p.m.

All performances are in the auditorium, located at Broadway and 42nd Street (enter on 42nd). Tickets will be available at the door: $10 general admission and $8 for Oakland Tech students and staff.

Firsts for Tech

The play represents some "firsts" for Oakland Tech. For the first time, the Fashion and Design Academy at Oakland Tech's Upper Campus (formerly Far West High School), under the direction of Katita Johnson, is designing the costumes for an Oakland Tech play.

Also, this will be the first production to use Oakland Tech's new stage lighting system, installed in September and early October 2012.

The stage lighting work signals the near completion of Phase 2 of Oakland Tech's auditorium renovation project. Prior work has included painting, acoustic treatments, a Meyer sound system, and a lighting and sound booth. The only remaining work is the purchase and installation of a high-quality projector and projection screen, for which the PTSA is raising $25,000.

To contribute to the renovation project, send your tax-deductible donations to: Oakland Tech PTSA, c/o Pat Williams, 3708 Lakeshore Avenue, Oakland, CA 94610, or donate online at <http://oaklandtech.com/staff/performingarts>.

A trio from East Bay Young Musicians added to the festivities and rocked the library.

Eyes on Rockridge

Despite Every Effort, a Car Is Towed

by Judith Doner Berne

So there was this vintage white car parked across the street for days, then weeks, then months.

We live on a typical Rockridge street with a majority of single-family homes mixed in with a few duplexes and apartment-style dwellings.

It features skinny, hump-backed driveways and garages that are used for everything else but cars – quite unlike the ample driveway and two-and-a-half car garage I left when we moved from suburban Detroit.

Here, as in many Rockridge neighborhoods, residents park on the street – often turning the process of finding curb space into a game of musical (if your radio is on) cars.

This car, which didn't have a current registration, "was there over two months," one neighbor said. "I made a good faith effort to find out who owned it." Another posted a note on the windshield requesting it be moved. A third finally e-mailed the Oakland Police Department's Vehicle Enforcement Unit.

To no avail; the car seemed an immovable object.

At last our block captain turned to the city's Neighborhood Watch Coordinator. "I keep in contact with her and thought when the car wasn't being removed by the city that she would be a good place to try to get in the 'back door' so to speak," she said. "And it worked!"

Enter Officer Andrew "Just call me Andy" Luty.

Luty, a former beat cop, has been in charge of the OPD's Abandoned Auto Detail for the last 11 of his 23 years on the force.

The unit once had eight civilian Police Service Technicians, but now is down to four.

However, that's not as bad as it sounds: With the increased price of scrap metal, cars, trucks and boats – once abandoned because they were old and/or not drivable – are now saleable.

Luty drove me down to the docks, where an approximately 50-by-50-foot pile of crushed cars spilled over the pavement, in wait to be funneled into a cargo ship.

"It's recycling at its finest," he said. "It's where the steel meets the ship."

In 2010, the Vehicle Enforcement Unit had 13,168 calls for service; in 2011, 10,659, Luty detailed. "It's gone down slightly," he said, "but it's still pretty high."

Could that be why the initial requests went unheeded?

"We're primarily complaint driven," Luty said.

Although it took an extra push to get the police involved, Luty insists: "We're obligated to get out there as quickly as we can. With four people it's all about putting orange stickers on cars," he says.

And that's what finally happened. The official sticker warned the car owner in three languages – English, Chinese and Spanish – that it had to be moved within 72 hours. "Our goal is to educate and that usually solves the problem," he said.

Luty, who has three teen-aged daughters, doesn't live in Oakland but his roots are here – from his great-grandfather on down to his dad, who graduated from Oakland Tech.

"Oakland can be very difficult," he said. But, even as a patrolman, "I've never been hurt, been shot at, never shot at anyone and never used my night stick."

"This (police) suit gives me a chance to hear people's stories. My badge just says 'Andy' and that's on purpose. It kind of sets the tone." Then it becomes "how can we work together and solve the problem. Sometimes it just doesn't work. Enforcement is the last resort."

Unfortunately, it came down to that when,

Although Oakland Police Officer Andy Luty says the department doesn't get many calls on abandoned cars in Rockridge, Luty and Rockridge News writer Judy Berne spotted this orange-stickered car during a ride through the neighborhood.

72 hours later, the stickered car hadn't been moved. So Luty called the towing company, which came within the hour.

Evidently, its owner(s) got the car out of tow, since I've seen it pop up occasionally on a nearby street.

The game may still be musical cars. But now everyone seems to be playing by the rules.

Is there an abandoned car on your block? For police response, leave a voice mail at 510/777-8622, e-mail AbandonedAuto@oakland.com, or fax 510/777-8880. Include the vehicle's location, description and license number, if the last is known.

Projects: RCPC and the Community Build a Neighborhood Library

“Rockridge is the only community in the nation to finance and drive to completion the building of a local library.”

— State Librarian Kevin Starr, September 1996

by Bernie Baltaxe, RCPC board member

The city of Oakland has had a public library since 1878. In 1919, a branch library opened in Rockridge and, in 1924, was moved to a former bank building at 5701 College Avenue. This small library served the community until 1987, when the landlord decided to convert the space to commercial use. The library’s rent jumped 10-fold from $500 a month to $5,000 a month. The library could not afford that amount; the branch was closed in September, 1987.

Unwilling to lose a community resource as important as a library, RCPC formed a Library Committee whose first order of business was to obtain a temporary site so the second busiest library in Oakland would continue to function. The next was to find a suitable location to establish a permanent home for a true, community-based, Rockridge Branch Library.

The first task was accomplished by placing a small modular building at Birch Court and College Avenue on the northwest corner of the grounds of Claremont Middle School. The limited size of the temporary building meant that the already small library space (1,731 square feet) would be reduced to a total of 1,400 square feet of which only 1,000 square feet would be accessible to the public.

Working with the city’s director of libraries, then-Councilmember Marge Gibson Haskell, the City Manager’s office, and the city’s Department of Public Works, the library committee planned and executed the relocation to Claremont Middle School (then known as Claremont Jr. High). After that, the real work began.

RCPC initiated a planning effort that grew to include many members of the community. The library committee, headed by Nancy Dutcher, an RCPC board member, created the separate Neighbors for a Rockridge Library committee. With the help and assistance of several local businesses and residents of the neighborhood, a plan evolved to make a permanent home for the library on a specific site on College Avenue.

The most desirable location at that time, known as the Art Stone property, was located at Manila and College. The site consisted of two lots, each with a house: a corner lot with a large Victorian residence containing a corner grocery on the ground floor, and the adjacent lot with another Victorian home and the remnants of the Art Stone business that had manufactured ornamental concrete bird baths, statues and fountains. Many houses in the neighborhood still have these concrete ornaments in their backyards, including my own. The city agreed to purchase the two lots using its Merchants Off-Street Parking Fund, and to donate a portion of the site to build a permanent Rockridge Library. This agreement is why the library has metered parking.

Having determined where the library should be, the next task was to obtain funding. A lot of money needed to be raised within Rockridge to fund the improvements, construction, furnishings and books that make up a library. If the community was to raise the money necessary to make this dream come true, the whole community would have to become part of the process. The first of a series of surveys regarding the neighborhood’s desires for the library was printed in the Rockridge News to start the ball rolling.

A committee known as RCPC/CAMA (Rockridge Community Planning Council/ College Avenue Merchants Association) proposed neighborhood funding through an assessment bond that would create a fee on each residential parcel in Rockridge. That yearly fee would pay for a substantial part of the cost.

One alternative was also considered. It was proposed that a mixed-use building, including rental housing units to generate

In Search of Silence

Paul Simon wrote "Sound of Silence" in 1964. At that time, acoustic guitars were very in. Since then, the world has gotten noisier and noisier. In fact, today the problem has become so great worldwide that the European Union (EU) has issued mandates to all member countries to create sound maps to try to get some understanding of the psychological and physiological effects our increasingly noisy soundscape has on us and our environment.

In 2009, WHO, the World Health Organization, made a similar policy statement. There is today serious concern about the impact of noise on cardiovascular health, sociological and emotional well being, and the growing incidences of autism, decreasing learning capabilities, hearing loss, and more. It's time to pay attention to what is happening in our own backyard.

Our Noisy Place

Rockridge, with freeways and BART traversing our space, is a noisy place. Most days, helicopters fly freely over our homes and gardens without concern for the impact that might have on the organic life below. Leaf blowers and construction tools disrupt our quiet afternoons. Our restaurants serve up near unbearable decibels of noise along with the latest drink concoctions. Conversation and thought are not wanted here. The din of 50,000 shouting football fans becomes part of our Saturday afternoon soundscape. Traffic provides an overlay of constant din. But, biggest of all is the intrusion of electronic sound almost everywhere we are. This is what concerns researchers most. It turns out that our uncanny ability to adapt to ever-higher levels of surrounding sound is not good for us. What we can't stomach we know how to overlay with white noise, mostly electronically generated sound from our iPods plugged directly into our brains. As the din gets louder, we just turn up the volume some more. Nobody knows what the outcome of that will be, although we are seeing signs of it.

Hearing Loss

Not many people talk about hearing loss. It's like a silent secret. And yet, statistically, one in three Americans suffers from some type of hearing loss. Americans are going deaf even faster than they are growing fat. Many of the sufferers of hearing loss must therefore be wandering among us, silently, while the rest of us keep noisily pushing past them. Of course, we think, hearing loss will never happen to us; in fact it may have already manifested in many of the boomer generation. As we become older, we too will find ourselves having to deal with the damaging effects of many years of exposure to dangerous levels of sound, whether from blasting music in our ears, or the unbearable screeching of BART wheels, sirens, traffic noise or the screams of football fans.

What Should We Do?

Reading "In Pursuit of Silence" by George Prochnik (found it at Mrs. Dalloway's bookstore in the Elmwood District), it is clear there are many arguments that can be made for and against noise mitigation. Prochnik points out that first, qualitative noise or sound needs to be differentiated from quantitative noise. Good noise can be energizing; raise mood levels. White noise actually helps some people to concentrate better. But some also think that white noise for babies as they sleep is not the best idea. Studies are showing that certain frequencies can also trigger emotional shifts toward greater serenity and gentility. This may be a good thing or, shades of its misuse in George Orwell's book, here we come, "1984."

Try to fix one problem and another one will certainly spring up. There are ongoing discussions concerning the construction of a sound walls through Rockridge, the benefits of which on the health of our community are still not clearly understood. The wrong barrier, according to Prochnik, can even transpose visual noise to more audio noise. Noiseless electric cars are great, but now we need to add sound to warn pedestrians.

Prochnik ends his exploration of noise versus silence with some insight: Let's try to lessen the din if we can, but more importantly, let's develop greater sensitivity toward – and appreciation of – silence. Find places where you can hear silence, because it is laden with meaning and a different kind of sound. Visit a museum, escape to the library or your studio; enter a place of worship when there is no service going on. In the theater, don't clap right away; savor that moment of silence when the music stops. Create a Zen garden; a neighborhood park; a pathway; architecture that respects silence as well as sound. And turn off your iPhone. As Plutarch said, "We hear silence from the gods, speech from men."

Gateway Survey: Shrubs and Safety Top Priorities

A first step to a cheerier, safer Claremont Avenue underpass will be improvements along the adjacent dog park fence.

by Sean Riley, local resident

Scenic Streets has released the results of its survey exploring further renovations to the Rockridge-Temescal Gateway.

The local volunteer group sought community feedback for Claremont Avenue improvements underneath Hwy 24 and the Hardy Park Dog Run, asking local residents to rank the leading ideas to transform this dreary space adjacent to Frog Park.

“Residents clearly want more greenery and improved lighting,” said Scenic Streets founder Peter Lund. “The underpass is barren and dingy, so shrubs and trees will add life and color. If we collect enough donations better illumination along the sidewalks and inside the dog run. Many reported that they don’t feel safe in the area after dark. This improvement faces a myriad of obstacles with the city and CalTrans, but Lund said Scenic Streets volunteers intend to explore the possibilities in early 2013.

Simple upgrades to the dog run, such as better drainage near the entrances, more durable seating and an improved watering station also ranked highly. Adding public artwork to the area, such as murals and sculpture, also got strong support.

Full survey results can be found at www.scenicstreets.org.

Merchant Links Web and Learning in Store Display

The September issue of The Rockridge News brought a bit more of the digital world than URLs – web and e-mail addresses – to the newsletter: Pages 9 and 11 presented QR (Quick Response) Codes.

Looking like little more than pixelated graphic images, the codes are passive containers of Internet connections, waiting for activation via a smart phone and its translator app.

Originally designed to monitor automotive production, the little tags have spread to the commercial world. Advertisers, especially, use them for web links to stores, special offers, and marketing.

Rockridge storekeeper Fred Womack of Maison d’Etre, 5640 College Avenue, believes QR codes have uses beyond mere commerce. He has designed a storefront window display that subtly illustrates informative and educational sites he offers to passersby via QR code images posted on the glass.

On your way to BART or while enjoying windowshopping, point your smart phone camera at each code to read it. You’ll need a translating app, available for free on the Web.

See Wikipedia at http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/QR_code for more information.

In Memory

Ruth Isaacson, a beloved Lawton Avenue resident since 1956, was born Ruth Ettlinger on July 28, 1921, in Karlsruhe, Germany. To escape Nazism, she immigrated to the U.S. by way of England, then married Robert Isaacson in New York, and raised five children while living in Utah, New Mexico, Colorado, and the Rockridge neighborhood.

A volunteer and employee with the Oakland Public Schools, Ruth received the Marcus Foster Distinguished Educator Award while working as secretary at Claremont Middle School. In retirement Ruth became a healer and masseuse, hosted visitors from around the world, and was often seen zipping around on her bicycle, long gray braids flying, while shuttling food from a local café to a women’s shelter.

Confined by a heart ailment during her later years, Ruthie continued to see friends and give massages. She passed away June 17, 2012, with family and friends by her side. Memorial gifts may be given to Claremont Middle School PTA, 5750 College Avenue, Oakland, 94618, or may be made online at:

income, be built at 5380 College Avenue. This proposal did not require creation of a parcel tax. However, as pointed out in the article I did on zoning issues in Rockridge (The Rockridge News, September, 2012), creating a multi-story apartment building on College Avenue was not what RCPC or area residents wanted. The village atmosphere of the neighborhood was at stake and the library project would have to be done without a large apartment building to provide the funding.

A petition drive was organized to obtain signatures from at least 10 percent of the residents within specific boundaries. Those boundaries later formed the first boundaries for RCPC, which, at around the same time, was incorporated as a non-profit organization. Non-profit status gave RCPC certain privileges, including fundraising and handling funds for the library. Using the authority of the Community Facilities District Act, commonly called a Mello-Roos taxation district, the petition was eventually signed by 1,214 residents, well above the 10 percent needed, and Measure L was placed on the ballot in November 1990.

None of the many volunteers had ever run a political campaign before, but signs were printed and thousands of phone calls made to educate the public on the benefits of the library. This intense campaign resulted in 81.6 percent of voters within the assessment district approving a $25 per year parcel tax for 30 years. The law required a two-thirds vote to pass the measure. Thanks to the tireless efforts of dozens of committed citizens, that threshold was far surpassed.

With one source of funding secured, and the commitment of the neighborhood made clear, volunteers began the process of seeking additional funding from the State Library Committee. The economy was struggling, and funding was drying up. Projects already planned and funded were being eliminated. A community effort was needed to lobby the state and ensure that the funding needed would be approved for the Rockridge project.

For the next year, a letter writing campaign was waged and telephone calls were made. Shortly after the Oakland Hills Firestorm in October 1991, residents trekked to Sacramento wearing Rockridge Library badges sporting colorful cellophane flames to lobby personally for funding for the Rockridge Library. In early 1992, the state allocated the funds.

For the next four years, community involvement was harnessed to determine the footprint of the new facility, the architecture, the color scheme, furnishings, books and equipment.

At the request of the community, a large community meeting space and a dedicated children's wing were included. The expertise of Rockridge residents was involved in every step of the process. Merchants also helped raise money by donating food and material for fundraising events. Great Harvest Bread Co., Market Hall and Rockridge Café were all instrumental in assisting the project. Granite pavers in the lobby and walkway were sold as fundraisers and engraved with whatever people requested, including family names, the names of parents and grandparents and faithful pets. Every conceivable effort was made to raise money for important equipment including what one article in The Rockridge News referred to as a "MacIntosh multi-media computer," which itself cost $4,000. A total of almost $158,000 was raised to buy books, furnishings and other enhancements for the library.

The diligence and perseverance of those involved cannot be overstated. Over 100 volunteers put in thousands of hours for 11 years before the doors opened in September, 1996. The willingness of the community to come together, offer their time, energy and money, plus the leadership of RCPC and a handful of dedicated individuals, created a prized and heavily used community asset that will stand for decades to come.

Special thanks to Don Kinkead and Annette Floystrop for providing the history and material needed for me to research and write this article.

Soundwalls and Rockridge projects. Most other comments were either neutral or supportive of the study process. Several speakers urged consideration of more aesthetically pleasing transparent soundwalls such as found in Europe and Asia.

Before year's end, the city will identify relevant property owners and distribute official petitions. Soundwall studies may proceed if sufficient support is shown by the end of the petition period, probably next September.

Information from the meeting will be available on the Fourth Bore Coalition or RCPC websites.
