Residents appeal proposed retail development at Colby and Claremont

by Adrienne DeAngelo
Coordinator, Claremont-Colby Coalition

On a dreary Saturday morning in October, the newly formed Claremont-Colby Coalition met, determined to overturn what it sees as capricious city zoning laws and to fight for the best interests of their neighborhood.

The coalition, comprised of residents of the Claremont/Colby/Forest area of Rockridge, was first alerted to the possibility of a new development project in its neighborhood over Labor Day weekend. That's when San Francisco-based developer K Square, which designed Beckett's in Berkeley and Bacar in San Francisco, outlined a proposed retail outlet at 5715 Claremont, a single-story building at the Colby Street intersection.

Concerned about the impact of retail in a residential zone, residents gathered at a September Rockridge Community Planning Council (RCPC) meeting to hear what developers Russ Keil and Doris Krevsky had in mind.

Until the new design is complete, the developers say they don't know what kind of tenants might be interested in moving into the space, but they explained that the design would divide the building into two 1,500 sq. ft. areas for retail or general food use, with picture windows and lighted signage on both the Colby and Claremont street sides.

Last week, during a two-hour, hotly debated Oakland Planning Commission meeting, all but Michael Lighty voted to approve the project with the following conditions:

It's a cozy fall, and the holidays are fast upon us. But with these cheery times, parents also face the daunting prospect of occupying their bustling youngsters on long, rainy, television-susceptible days. Many of us are also contemplating holiday gifts that won't stunt brainwaves during those same indoor hours. On both counts, may we

In My Opinion

Should There be Higher Density Housing Along College Avenue?

Editor's Note: An opinion piece by Hiroko Kurihara in the October issue of The Rockridge News urged an increase in housing density along College Avenue as a way to create a sustainable community and attract neighborhood-serving businesses (In My Opinion, "Building on the Bungalow and the Rockridge Way of Life," p.2). Below are two letters responding to the article, one boldly rejecting the proposal and another expressing interest in constructing housing more suitable for seniors. These responses may represent round one in a renewed debate on neighborhood housing density.

"No" to More Apartment Buildings in Rockridge!

by Gary Lippman

When I moved into my house in the Rockridge neighborhood, area residents asked me to sign a petition opposing the construction of apartment buildings along the "Broadway Corridor" from College Avenue to the freeway, Highway 24. Having just purchased a house one lot off of Broadway, I readily signed. I moved to this area to get away from rampant development.

Why on earth would anyone living in this neighborhood advocate for increased housing density along College Avenue? Surely, Rockridge residents who live near College Avenue don't want their privacy and quiet compromised even more!

With the new California "in-law addition" rules, the density of this neighborhood will increase in a slow, sustainable way, house to house, over the years, as homeowners add in-law units to their single family dwellings. Isn't that going to be enough for Rockridge?

Residents of the new multiple unit apartments proposed by Kurihara will undoubtedly have cars, pickups or sport utility vehicles, and will want to park them along the streets crossing or terminating at College Avenue, thus adding to parking congestion.

If the College Avenue corridor is over-developed, then I fear that the developers and their advocates will push to build multiple story housing along the Broadway corridor, thereby compromising the valued privacy of nearby residents.

Of course, all of us living here would love to have a neighborhood pharmacy and a neighborhood hardware store we can walk or ride our bicycles to. In fact, I have been riding my bicycle to Elmwood Hardware for 30 years, Grand Lake Hardware for 30 years, and to the late great G and G Hardware in the Temescal district for several decades. If I merely need a screwdriver, I can purchase one at Long's, a short walk from any house in Rockridge, or at Albertson's or Safeway. There are pharmacies near College and Alcatraz and in Long's. For Kaiser members, there are several pharmacies at Kaiser. I suspect that many Rockridge residents order their prescriptions online.

There is no rational reason to give up our "romantic notions" of living in bungalows in Rockridge. Many people moved here specifically to live in Rockridge bungalows and they should be able to do so without being compromised by big apartment buildings and their residents.

Living History: Rockridge's Otterbein Manor

by Lydia Gans, Staff Writer

Rockridge is a great neighborhood to live in. There are all sorts of fine restaurants and specialty stores, convenient public transportation, many lovely houses and lots of greenery. Best of all, it is not exclusive; there are no fences or gates to keep people out. So among the affluent young families who can buy expensive homes, there are elderly folks, some with limited incomes, who are able to live in the neighborhood. All of which makes for a diverse mix of people who can help each other, learn from each other and generally create a more interesting community.

Otterbein Manor on Manila Avenue just off College, houses some 40 elderly people, all subsisting on limited incomes. Some were born in foreign countries; others hail from all over the United States.

Alice Correll has lived there eight years. I first met her many years ago when she came to my door campaigning for a political candidate. She can't get around much any more, but she is still deeply interested in politics. She used to organize activities for the building residents and, though she is more limited now in what she can do, she keeps in touch and stays informed. Some of the residents in the building are very private and keep to themselves, but others, like Alice, keep connected with each other and the community.

There is the diminutive Chinese couple who speak little English and spend their days across the street in the library, and a Russian couple who are also struggling with English. (The wife's first name is Ninel, Alice tells me, which is Lenin spelled backwards). A Latino man down the hall was a professional baseball player. Adele, also on Alice's floor, served in the WACs in World War II. Alice describes Beverly as the one who "takes care of everybody." She goes around every night checking up to make sure everyone is OK.

Chester Chan spends his time going on board ships in the harbor helping foreign crewmen, many Asians and Phillipinos, who are often not allowed ashore, with their mail and paperwork or whatever they need. Lions, and Tigers, and Bears, Oh My!

by Mike Taylor

On a picture-perfect Hallowe'en afternoon, several hundred goblins, wizards, princesses, and other costumed holiday trick or treaters paraded along College Avenue on October 31, enjoying goodies from local merchants. The annual event, co-sponsored by RCPC and the Rockridge District Association (RDA), was organized with the help of many by Doug Farrow of Jucy's. From Hudson Bay Caffe and Chic at the south end of College up to Vero and Agatha Rainford Boutique at the north end, over fifty merchants participated.

Besides passing out treats, Redhound had a Pet Costume Contest, Namaste held a Circus Yoga, and Christensen Heller Gallery sponsored a Stoller Brigade. Organized by Jan Heller, the brigade carried signs related to favorite ballot initiatives and candidates. Heller had hoped to break the Guinness

Book of World Records set in Slovakia of 108 strollers pushed one mile, but while the Rockridge route exceeded one mile, the number of participants lagged. Undiscouraged, Heller says they'll try to break the record again in Spring.

Theresa Nelson of the RCPC worked closely with the RDA in organizing the Hallowe'en Parade. Watching from the corner of College and Keith, Nelson observed, "The wonderful thing about the parade is the fabulous creativity of the children's costumes. It puts a smile on your face all day long."

Plague of Burglaries Has Rockridge Hills Residents on Edge

by Susan Montauk, NCPC

About 60 nervous Upper Rockridge residents attended the October 19 Neighborhood Crime Prevention Council (NCPC) meeting at the Temescal Library to voice their concerns about a series of burglaries that has plagued their neighborhood (police beat 13X, just west of Highway 13) in the last two months. Frightened by accounts of several face-to-face confrontations with one of the perpetrators and frustrated by the increase of these types of crimes, they came seeking help from the Oakland Police Department (OPD) and the greater Rockridge NCPC steering committee.

OPD suspects at least two perpetrators are involved: a daytime burglar who may be a Hispanic male and a nighttime cat burglar (one who steals when people are at home). Strapped by staffing shortages, OPD has assigned beat 12X Officer Johnna Watson overtime hours to work with 13X Beat Officer Felicia Aisthorpe on these burglaries.

Watson reported that witness and victim reports have developed this profile of the suspected cat burglar: Male black, 40s, well-dressed (as in a business suit), 6' tall, athletic build, bald or shaven head, thin goatee and sometimes wearing glasses. He apparently fits into the neighborhood. The officers believe he may spend morning hours walking around to identify his targets, usually about two houses in the same evening, choosing homes that have open doors and windows. He steals electronic equipment and jewelry and probably has a car parked nearby to carry off the goods.

Watson said the cat burglar is most likely a professional criminal, possibly a parolee, who gets a high from facing his victims. But he has not been violent or aggressive. One victim confronted the burglar as he was entering her back door and chased him away only to discover that he had already stolen property on a prior trip. Another found him in her house and screamed at him to leave, pointing to the exit. He did so immediately, climbing over a roof and a fence to get away.

Tracking down and catching these criminals is no easy matter. Upper Rockridge has not been a hotbed of crime until now, experiencing primarily auto theft and auto burglaries, so not many Home Alert groups exist. Also, neighbors in this area tend not to know each other well so strangers are not easily identified. The cat burglar has left no prints — he is reported to wear white gloves.

Upper Rockridge resident Stephen Fox is leading the effort to organize local residents; their first Home Alert meeting was held October 25. E-mail networks and phone trees are being set-up to speedily disseminate information and alerts of suspicious behavior. His group is working hand-in-hand with the assigned officers to solve these crimes. However, Fox is concerned about systemic problems in the police department. As two examples, he cites a lack of communication up and down the chain of command and a shortage of personnel that can be assigned to burglary investigations. He urges concerned citizens to write letters or send e-mails to their councilmember, the mayor and OPD.

Update: Suspect Arrested

A parolee has been arrested on suspicion of being the notorious Oakland hills cat burglar. Police warn, however, that evidence is still being gathered and that residents should remain on high alert, especially since other burglars may be involved in the rash of break-ins. Police data also show that the burglaries are not confined to hill homes. As of October 28, 59 homes have been burglarized in North Oakland, a majority in upper and lower Rockridge.

SAFETY TIPS: If you come home and find that your home has been burglarized, exit the house immediately and find a safe place to hide, such as your car, where you can observe the house. Never explore the house yourself: the burglar may still be on the premises. Call 911 as soon as possible to report the burglary. Tell OPD dispatch you do not know whether the burglar is still in the house. If you call from a cell phone, dial 510/777-3211. (Program this emergency number into your cell phone. Do not use 911 — you will be connected to the California Highway Patrol.) Lock doors and windows and turn on your alarm, even when you are at home.

Rabbit Food

As a child of the 40s and 50s, a salad in my home consisted of iceberg lettuce, tomato wedges and sliced cucumbers served with what my mother called Russian dressing — a mixture of mayonnaise and ketchup. Much to my mother’s dismay, I called the salad rabbit food. By the time I was a young adult, I wanted nothing to do with salads. Why would anyone go to an all-you-can-eat salad bar? Soup and salad? Not for me. Dressing on the side? Don’t bother, just hold the lettuce. I’m no rabbit.

Rabbits beware. Over the past several years there has been a revolution in availability of leafy greens that give a whole new meaning to tossed and composed salads. Traditional iceberg lettuce is somewhat tasteless, so it is served with thick, flavorful dressings such as blue cheese or ranch. Remember those salad bars with crocks of gooey dressing and long ladles to spoon onto the salad? Today’s greens have distinct flavors of their own and require little dressing. Instead of weighing them down with dressing, young salad chefs simply coat them with high-grade extra virgin oil, some lemon juice and a few select herbs.

Once only available at high-end green grocers, greens like arugula, radicchio, frisee, chicory, purslane, and the new kid on the block, mache, can be found in most supermarkets. Both Market Hall Produce and Yasai Market carry a wide selection of seasonal greens. Because these greens have very distinctive flavors, I would suggest first tasting a bit of each leaf. For example, arugula, also called rocket, is a bitterish, aromatic salad green with a peppery mustard flavor. It is extremely popular in Italy, but Americans might find its flavor too assertive. Radicchio, chicory, endive, frisee and escarole tend to have a bittersweet taste and are best used when young, as they increase in bitterness with age. Small combinations of these greens form the basis for a special salad mix called mesclun. Mache is the newest “in” gourmet green. Native to Europe, mache is also known as field lettuce, or lamb’s lettuce. The narrow, dark green leaves of mache are very tender and have a tangy nutlike flavor. Mache does not keep well and should be used within a day or two of purchase. My new favorite green is sorrel. Sorrel has a sour and acidic taste. For salads, only young sorrel leaves should be used as the more mature leaves are very sour and best for soups.

Although somewhat expensive, gourmet greens have so much flavor you need just a few leaves, some herbs and a minimalist dressing to create an exquisite, after-meal composed salad. Gourmet salad greens bruise easily and need to be handled with care. Most are grown in sandy soil and tend to be gritty and may need to be washed several times. In contrast to head lettuces, delicate baby greens should be soaked in cold water, gently swirled, and pat-dried with a kitchen towel instead of using a salad spinner.

Rather than a formal recipe this month, I would suggest a composed arugula, basil, and fig salad. On a plate place a large handful of arugula leaves; sprinkle over them thinly sliced fresh basal and fresh mint. Cut two firm-ripe figs into quarters lengthwise; scatter figs over the greens. Drizzle with extra virgin olive oil. This will make one first-course serving. How easy is this? No salt, pepper or vinegar. Remember, for these types of salads, less is more. Run, rabbit, run.

The Fall and Winter Market

Agents know that this season is a slower time for real estate activity. Even in a hot seller’s market, selling prices can be impacted. Buyers can be reluctant to buy and move; sellers are concerned about a winter sale; and now there is a general concern about the economy, politics, and risky loan packages. For Buyers, this can be a good time to persist and receive some relief on pricing. For Sellers, home preparation for sale and proper pricing is critical. Despite media reports, more homes are sitting on the market longer due to excessive pricing and poor presentation. Contact me to discuss your next real estate decision:

suggest something that doesn't beep, buzz or shoot laser fire? We do guarantee that your kids will light up. On Thursday, November 18 at 7p.m., RCPC invites you and your family to join our children's book forum.

Patricia Lichter, the head librarian at the Rockridge Branch Library, will kickoff our discussion by presenting the 2005 Master Plan for the Oakland Public Libraries. Then, children's librarian Gay Ducey will bring our focus to children's literature. Gay will entice us with the adventures that await young readers in the Rockridge Branch, from children's programs offered this fall, to hot titles that line the knee-high shelves. Gay has a bird's-eye view of what excites young readers, and will also share a wise perspective on what parents may want to be cautious about. Come with your questions about age-appropriate materials, and learn what's big in the backpack, from anime to the classics we all remember.

RCPC is also pleased to present local author Melissa Lion, whose first novel for young adults, Swollen, was published by Random House this year. Hailing from St. Mary's College with a graduate degree in creative writing, Melissa offers her young readers an "edgy, literary experience," not limited to fantasy. Melissa's second novel, Upstream, will be published next spring.

Rounding out our discussion, children's literature specialists from Diesel and Pen-dragon, our very own College Avenue booksellers, will also be on hand to share their experiences with recent trends and to offer their suggestions.

For anyone who knows a child who loves to read, or knows a reluctant reader ready to discover the joy of books, this is a night not to miss!

With God On Their Side

"Bush is surrounded by advisors... who believe that his presidency was ordained by God"

by Jessica Pitt

Published on the eve of the 2004 Presidential election, Esther Kaplan's new book With God On Their Side: How Christian Fundamentalists Trampled Science, Policy, and Democracy in George W. Bush's White House (The New Press, 2004) is an investigation of the influence of the Christian Right on the Bush administration. Kaplan, a journalist and daughter of former RCPC board member Meredith Kaplan, discusses the myriad ways she finds that Christian fundamentalism has seeped into American policy, from abortion and sex education to gay rights, social services, court appointments, medical research, and even international relations.

Kaplan begins by providing a glimpse into the Bush administration. She writes, "This is an administration where weekly Bible study at the White House is attended by more than half the White House staff, and daily Bible study at the Department of Justice is presided over by the Attorney General. It is an administration where the staff of the General Services Administration hold revival meetings at lunch hour." From his trusted political strategist, Karl Rove, to his chief speechwriter, his Attorney General, and many other high ranking administration officials, Bush is surrounded by advisors who share his Christian faith and believe that his presidency was ordained by God, not to mention the many evangelical Christian leaders with whom Bush and his administration interact regularly, and who have had unprecedented access to the President and a profound influence on every aspect of government, Kaplan writes.

Kaplan systematically moves from one policy domain to another, exposing the degree to which she finds Christian fundamentalism has shaped this administration's policies. Beginning with foreign relations and moving to social policy, science, abortion rights, gay rights, HIV/AIDS, education, and the judiciary, Kaplan provides an in-depth account of how Bush has ceded huge swaths of his domestic and international policy to the Christian Right in order to shore up his base among Christian conservatives.

The picture that emerges from With God On Their Side is indeed disturbing, and should set off alarm bells for those, like myself, who believe in the separation of church and state. In four short years, that separation has been deeply eroded. As Kaplan points out, even with a change in administration, the muscle that Bush has put behind the Christian right agenda will have a lasting impact.

With God on Their Side is a well-researched and readable account of possibly one of the most profound policy shifts to occur in this country in decades. As Kaplan convincingly argues, the Bush administration has offered this once marginal movement a degree of influence over the federal government that far outstrips their sway over any previous administration; and she argues there has been far too little public debate about its corrosive effects on our basic values of pluralism and democracy.

Joining Barclay's Parliament Beer Tasting Club

"Make it one for my Baby, and 1,169 for the road"

by Tricia Gragnano

I'm riding my bicycle past the 76 Station on my way home after a very boring day at work. Heading south down College Avenue, preparing for some cranky person to cut me off during rush-hour, I'm ready to hit the brakes at any given moment. When I spot a vacant meter across from Barclay's, I impulsively pull my bike over to the curb. "Ah," I sigh. I've found my happy hour. The sun is falling behind College Avenue just as the twilight breeze arrives.

I lock my bike to the meter, pull down the right pant leg of my 501s, zip up my sweater and jay-walk over to the pub. I walk right up to the bar and sit down, my mouth watering for some of that hoppin' Indian Pale Ale (IPA) on tap. Just as I sit on the barstool, a guy says to me, "Hello there, name's Andy." He has a warm smile on his face, is tall, and is carrying some weight around his belly. I smile briefly and say hello back, even though I am thinking to myself that the last thing I want to do is have some lousy conversation with a stranger. But I say hello back, and give Andy fair warning that I'll be going outside to read my book.

Thirty minutes later I have joined the Barclay's "Parliament Beer Tasting Club," Tricia quaffs her lead-off beer selection with Andy as she signs up for the Parliament Beer Club at Barclay's.

and am marking off my first pint of beer, number 1,170 from the "beer card" I've received. For an initial fee of $10 you can join the club. There are over 1,700 different beers to chose from, and as a member you mark off each different brew you consume from your "beer card." The bar will keep your card on file at the pub. The more beer you consume, the more stuff you get, such as a T-shirt, dinner for two, or a commemorative pin. Plus, once you've reached your 100th beer, pat yourself on the back — that's one hell of an accomplishment. But then celebrate because your name will be put on a plaque above the bar!

After I learned about all of this, I had to ask, "Andy, has anyone ever finished the entire list?" He just smiled. He said not ever to his knowledge, but plenty of Rockridge patrons are in here daily eagerly marking off their lists.

From here, Andy educated me about beer. He explained, "When the foam of the beer sits along the edge of a pint, that means the beer has a high alcoholic content." He told me more about the consistencies of the brews and the entire brewing process. I grabbed for my pint and took a sip of the IPA I'd been educated on, and looked for the dark, rich, chocolate flavor he described.

"Mmm... I can taste those qualities," I said to myself. Then I learned even more. Not about the beer, but about Barclay's and the Parliament Beer Tasting Club.

Andy informed me that every second Sunday of the month, beers are half off for beer club members. And the first Tuesday of the month, Barclay's will introduce a new beer for Parliament Club members to sample and mark off on their beer cards. Membership benefits include invitations to meetings and other events, as well as dinners with brewers.

I can see Andy's face light up as he speaks about the bar, the club, and the beer. I never knew my happy hour was going to be this informative, but at this point I tell Andy, my new friend, "I'm going outside to read my book." I want to finish my pint alone, and consider what my impulse had gotten me into. Overall, I am pleased with my decision. I now know how to skip rush hour traffic, and just pedal down to this Rockridge favorite, mark off a pint from my card, and have a not so lousy conversation after all.

The sun is down and I still have to ride my bike up the hill. I shake hands with my friend and say that I'll be seeing him soon, especially now that we belong to the same club.

I've got a long way to go with this list, but I'll tell you I'm sure it'll be worth every ounce! If you're ever in the mood for a refreshing beer on tap, or you feel like joining a club in which everyone is happy-go-lucky (perhaps tipsy), than I suggest this local pub. It's one of those places where "everyone knows your name."

"That's right, Trish," Andy says.

The Rockridge Muse by Ortrun Niesar

Giving Thanks To Arts Participants

Art for Politics

Thank you to all the artists and their sponsors who contributed their talent to fundraising events during this year's hotly debated election campaign. In the last weeks the invitations simply flowed, and the money did too. The artists donated their talents, the organizers their homes and energy to make it all happen. We celebrate the spirit and generosity of the people who live here and contribute so much to the common good. May you have reached your financial goals. May the candidate of your choice have won!

Rockridge Photography Exhibition

Thank you to all who participated in the October Rockridge Photography

Guitarist Richard Flores performed for a rapt audience at the Roble Road home of Claire and William Wahrhaftig on Sunday, October 24. The Music 4 Kerry event included professional opera singers Nanette McGuinness, Virginia Chen, Jonathan Smucker, Patrick Leveque and pianist William G. Ludtke. Organized and supported by many volunteers, the fundraiser included a gourmet buffet and fine wines from Jewel Winery and Taste Catering.

exhibition at the Rockridge library. Thank you to Ted Williams for that great collectable poster. Events like this take many hours of hard work and personal commitment to make them happen. We hope you enjoyed the show. If you are interested in working with us on the next one, call Ortrun at 652-6664 for more information.

Pro Arts BoxArt 2004

Thank you to the many artists and supporters who help make the annual Pro Arts BoxArt fundraiser a real financial success each year. Pro Arts is our community arts organization. It supports over 1,000 artist members from our neighborhoods. This year's challenge was to take a piece of drywall from the former gallery on Ninth Street and turn it into a work of art for display at the new gallery on Clay and Second Streets at Jack London Square. One-hundred-fifty artists contributed some incredible works that will be sponsored and auctioned off at the closing reception on November

18. Thank you to Ken Rice who produced the beautiful poster, and to the many Rockridge artists who contributed works of art. We hope that you will want to come and bid on some of the ingenious creations, like Kate Runyan's "Three Strikes" or Linda Lemon's weightless paper construction.

For gallery hours, information and how you can sponsor an artist, call 510/763-4361.

December Rockridge Arts Scene

Holiday Open Studios in Rockridge will take place December 4-5. We thank these wonderful participating artists for being a part of our community and for contributing their artworks so often to local charities such as Ehouse for their fundraisers. See the notice below for details on this year's participating artists. Go visit them; take a friend with you.

Sefina Studio's Affordable Luxury

At last Rockridge has a store where you can buy fine lingerie in luscious colors and fabrics as well as fashionable daywear and copies of celebrity eveningwear. Sefina Studio opened in April 2004, and has been making its mark as a fashion destination on lower College Avenue ever since.

Lingerie in a rainbow of colors hanging along the top of the wall caught my eye the moment I walked into the store. Sefina has almost everything you could ever want in lingerie, available in silks, cottons and other fabrics. The Cosabella line from Italy features gorgeous colors in many styles: sheer lace, push-up, stretch, cami, soft and molded cups, and tanks with built-in bras. There's also a line of bras and panties from Mary Green of San Francisco that were featured in the film "13 Going on 30". Sefina also carries panties in many styles: thongs, boy leg shorts, bikinis, and hot pants (higher cut than boy legs). Special options include the Infinity thong, a super-seamless panty to wear under tight-cut pants, and the Soiré thong, voted "most comfortable" in Glamour magazine. Also available is the Featherlite Nu Bra, a set of form-fitting bra shapes perfect for coverage needed under revealing clothing, using a medical adhesive that can be used up to 120 times.

Sefina Studio offers many interesting and fun choices. The line of Hollywood Fashion tops modeled after the famous Jennifer Lopez green Versace dress offers a low-cut version which fits a wider variety of women's shapes. The 3 Dots t-shirts are very popular — they were voted best overall t-shirt in Real Simple magazine — and come in very soft cotton and clear colors. The ABS black skirt with contoured seaming would flatter every figure, accompanied by the crisp white cotton shirt with bodice detail by Laundry. For fall, Sefina has Chanel-inspired suits from ABS in teal and pink, and stretch pants in black or white. From Max Studio comes a cami and skirt set in cocoa and rose petal, and from Kenneth Cole, soft supima cotton and silk skirts and off-the-shoulder sweaters. Cute mesh sportswear from H Starlet features ribbon trim on jogging suits.

A great feature of Sefina Studio is the collection for evening, proms and special occasions. Owner Lily Campbell has selected a wide range of dresses, many inspired by some of the most popular gowns worn by celebrities. From ABS come the "Beyonce" pink corset dress (inspired by Dior); the pink empire waist chiffon dress with black sash like the one worn by Renée Zellweger in the film "Down With Love", the famous "Marilyn" dress in pleated chiffon; Angelina Jolie's Narciso Rodriguez-inspired sheath with satin insets; and Diane Keaton's off-the-shoulder matte jersey cocktail dress from "Something's Gotta Give." A platinum Grecian-style sheath with side button detail is classic, and there's a black stain charmeuse sheath with a vertical "entrance and exit" ruffle that is stunning. It's the closest most of us will ever come to the red carpet, and these dresses will carry you through almost any special occasion.

Lily has "a passion not only for clothes but for solutions, helping people find the right outfit for an event or travel." She offers personal attention, advice and assistance, and carries lines which respond to her customer's needs. For example, many women often find regular jeans tend to gap in the back, so Sefina carries the Joe's Denim design called "the Honey," cited by several fashion magazines as the best solution to a neater waistline for curvy women. One customer who modeled the jeans during my visit proved the solution works.

Like many of her colleagues who have opened unique stores on College Avenue, Lily has an unusual background. With a B.S. in microbiology and immunology, she spent 13 years working in the biopharmaceutical industry before returning to the Bay Area to look for new opportunities, and ultimately opened Sefina Studio. She and her husband, Jeffrey, who manages some aspects of the business, live in Oakland. They are delighted to be able to offer higher-end clothing here in Rockridge so that local shoppers can keep their patronage and tax dollars in Oakland. They have been very pleased with the reception they've received in Rockridge. As Lily noted, "the customers here really know their lines and cuts and what they want. It's such a pleasure to work with this community."

With the holidays coming up, Sefina Studio is an important stop for party dresses, daywear and gifts of lingerie and other finery.

SMOKE GETS... EVERYWHERE

Editor:

As a Rockridge resident who walks her dog in the evenings, I have opportunity to experience regularly and at first hand wood smoke pollution from fireplaces. On some evenings in winter, I have returned home with my clothes, my hair, and my dog's hair permeated with the smell of smoke.

Wood smoke is responsible for 30% of particulate matter, a particularly dangerous form of pollution because the particle size is so tiny that it easily passes into the lungs, where it remains. This poses a risk to all, especially the elderly, those with reduced lung function, and children. The smoke from one fireplace travels almost a block in whichever direction the air currents drift.

As we approach winter, I would like to ask Rockridge residents who regularly use their fireplaces to limit this discretionary activity for the sake of the general health of all. In our mild Bay Area winters, people are outdoors a lot, day and evening. Having to breathe fireplace smoke while working outdoors on a cool day or having smoke come in through a window open for ventilation is really a violation of our right to clean air. We in Rockridge already have plenty of pollution from automobiles and trucks, could we not try to reduce, or better still, stop, this admittedly pleasurable activity for all our sakes?

ROCKRIDGE HISTORY IN FOUND RING?

Editor:

I live on Rockridge Boulevard. My husband and I were recently adding sprinkler lines to our front yard when I discovered what appears to be a ruby ring. There are initials inside the ring: F. (or T) C. W. to L. E. B. 7-14-04. The jewel stamp is WWH & Co., and the band is gold. I wanted to know if anyone could tell me a little more about the history. I would like to find out if there were any jewelers in our area with that stamp. If anyone could offer more of a research lead, I would appreciate it.

Rockridge Needs Senior-Friendly Housing

by Eileen Levin

My husband and I have been in Rockridge only two years, but we would like to stay here permanently. My husband is legally (not totally) blind, and can not drive, so being near BART and having the grocery and dry cleaner within walking distance has given him a sense of mobility that he lost 21 years ago. Wanting to “downsize” when our children grew up and moved on, we bought a two-bedroom bungalow on Chabot Road. After doing a fair bit of remodeling to update the kitchen and bath and add more closets, we realized that one of our children would be coming home to live, so we decided to finish the basement and attic as well.

Herein lies the problem. As we get older, (my husband is 61 and I am 57), we find that our knees do not like the eight steep concrete steps up to our house, and the steps up and down to our respective office spaces and laundry. In fact, the stairs may be the single reason that we may leave Rockridge.

We have spent many Sundays looking at houses in the Rockridge area, for ones with no stairs that are at least 1600 square feet, or for condos that have at least two bedrooms and a den in a building with storage, parking and an elevator. So far, we have had no luck. I’m beginning to think such housing doesn’t exist in Rockridge.

Walking around College Avenue, I see many folks in my age bracket; no doubt, many of them are homeowners in the neighborhood. I wonder how many of us would love to stay in this neighborhood — if only we could find reasonably sized housing that didn’t tax our knees or get us breathless. (It gets harder every year to lug the vacuum cleaner and laundry up and down the stairs.) I don’t expect to be able to find a one-story, 2,500 square foot house on these tiny lots, but I don’t see any options for those of us who need a reasonable amount of space with no steps.

As I read your opinion piece in the October Rockridge News, I caught the sentence about higher density housing and wondered what you had in mind. Since we would like to stay in this neighborhood until we are carried out, I would like to have some input in how decisions are made about housing, transportation and traffic. Please consider me an interested party in helping to keep Rockridge a sustainable, “walkable” neighborhood.

We need to raise up to $25,000 from the community to complete Phase Two of the entire Greenbelt. City and State bond funds will pay for most of this phase, but without community support, we will have to scale back and even eliminate some park elements!

So far we have raised more than $13,000, more than halfway to our goal. You can make it happen with a general donation or one dedicated to a specific item like a swing. For gifts of $250 or more, your company or family name will appear on the main park plaque.

- Retail sales would be allowed until 9 p.m. daily,
- The space could be used by a restaurant with up to 49 seats,
- A restaurant could be open from 7 a.m. until 10 p.m. daily,
- Trucks would make deliveries on Claremont Avenue,
- Trash would be picked up on Claremont Avenue.

Members of the Claremont-Colby Coalition feel these conditions are inappropriate. They are planning to appeal the Board's decision.

One of the coalition's primary concerns, which was not addressed by the commission, is traffic at the Colby/Claremont intersection. Developers are not required by the City to improve traffic patterns or increase parking. Unfortunately, the intersection is a bad one, with everything from fender benders to more serious accidents occurring frequently. This intersection has had more accidents over the past year than any other in Rockridge, including the busy one at Claremont and College.

Also, for residents of Colby and Forest Streets, where many homes don't have driveways, parking is already a challenge. Other residents are concerned about congestion, trash, pedestrian safety and noise.

Thus, residents strongly favor a professional office moving into the vacant building rather than retailers. In fact, professional office space is in short supply in Rockridge.

Unfortunately, professional office space is not specifically included in the City's General Plan for this zoning designation. To pursue this alternative, the coalition needs to learn more information about previous uses of the building. Beyond that, it will be necessary to amend the city's guidelines for the General Plan, a long and difficult process but an important one for the Rockridge community.

"This property provides great possibilities," according to Ron Kriss, owner of Lawton Associates Real Estate. "It would be a shame to squander an opportunity to

PROJECT UPDATE

As of October 28, it appears that the developers may be backing out of the project. Regardless of their decision, the Claremont-Colby Coalition will continue to explore amending Oakland's General Plan to allow for professional use at the site. Because there will certainly be other prospective buyers, there will be opportunity for further input from the community. Any information about this space or about the specifics of amending the General Plan will be helpful.

responsibly develop this vital corner in our neighborhood."

To forward their appeal to the Planning Commission and possibly the City Council, the Claremont-Colby Coalition is looking for additional information from Rockridge residents. If you are aware of previous uses of the site, or would like to receive more information, email Adrienne at adfoodie@yahoo.com, call the coalition at 658-1353. The more known about the site, the stronger a case can be made for professional use.

Even with her limited English, she communicates, and she usually comes home with a flower that someone has given her. She too has an interesting history. Born in Belarus, she enlisted in the Red Army in World War II and sustained severe injuries which she still suffers from. She and her husband lived in many different parts of the world before coming here to join family members who had fled the Chernobyl disaster.

Economic and mobility problems make it hard for many of the residents to get out much, but they are still people who care about the world and have interesting life stories and insights to share. Satellite Housing, the nonprofit agency that operates Otterbein Manor, provides only a part time "advocate/service coordinator." It would be nice if an organization or individuals in the community made a connection with the residents and offered to help organize some projects or activities that would be of mutual enjoyment and benefit.
